"Well; you recognized them," the Princess said calmly. "Four, I think. Yes? They are Madame de Pompadour's men," she added. "She does not trust you, poor woman; she, too, sent messages from Versailles, and she will wish to know in the morning the reason why you have not arrested the impudent hussy who derided her at an inn, who is a traitor into the bargain, and who was in your power, alone, undefended, and with the evidence of her guilt staring you in the face." She quietly touched the despatch and the letter, lying on the table. "Unless, my friend, you wish to join George Onslow, the Comte de Mont Rouge, and myself in the cells you had better do your duty."

Andre feverishly took up the papers; he looked now towards the great window into the Carrefour, now towards that hateful little outlook into the court where he knew the sleuth-hounds of an ambitious woman dogged their guilty prey.

"It is useless to destroy the papers," the Princess remarked placidly. "That will only send Mademoiselle de Beau Sejour to join our pleasant party at the Bastile. Madame de Pompadour is a great and beautiful woman, but like all really ambitious men and women she has no mercy, and she naturally does not wish to take our places in the cells. She is fighting for her life and love as you are. Come, Vicomte, be reasonable. In five minutes it will be all over and you will return a hero to Versailles. Remember what awaits you there."

Every sentence in this calmly terrible speech made Andre feel more misery than he could have believed a man could endure.

"Why be in any doubt?" she began again.

"Oh, for God's sake—" he pleaded. "For God's sake——"

"No, you must hear me out. The proof of my treachery is here; they, these men, will find it on me"; she had drawn a paper from her breast. Do you know what that is? It is a copy of the secret despatch; it is addressed to the agent who would convey it to England, and it is signed."

She held it up and in the flickering light Andre could see the red mystic sign of the crossed daggers and the cipher number. He shivered as she replaced it in her bosom. "The game is up for me," she said in her impassive voice. "That paper will send me to the scaffold, and unless you arrest me it will send you too."

"You are mad," he cried incoherently, and he really believed what he said. "You are mad."

CONSTRUCTING FIREPROOF OUTBUILDINGS.

Serious efforts have recently been made, to reduce the frightful loss from lightning and fire on Canadian farms. And they have been wholly successful, not only in securing a thoroughly lightning and fireproof construction, but also in bringing the price down to, and even below, that of the old-time board and shingle barn.

The new plan is to use corrugated galvanized sheets for roofing and siding barns and all outbuildings. These sheets are very rigid, and make a perfectly strong construction when used over very light framework. No sheeting boards are used at all—only light purlin strips being necessary.

Such buildings are now becoming very common, and users everywhere affirm that "Acorn Quality" Corrugated Galvanized Sheets, manufactured by the Metal Shingle & Siding Co., Limited, of Preston, Ont., is the most satisfactory material known for the purpose. They are so heavily galvanized that they easily outlast a generation and never need repairs. The firm above mentioned will gladly send to inquirers their interesting literature about "Acorn Quality" Corrugated Galvanized Sheets, and give names of users in all parts of Canada. 46

SLIPS OF NOVELISTS

LEGAL MISTAKES THAT HAVE BEEN MADE BY GREAT AUTHORS.

Dickens and the Famous Case of Bardell Versus Pickwick—The Trial Scene in Reade's "Hard Cash." Trollope's Dip Into the Law.

"Legal fictions," says one of Gilbert's gondoliers, "are solemn things." Yet it is curious how seldom a novelist ventures into a law court without driving his quill through acts of parliament and rules of law alike.

That Dickens' knowledge of law, like Mr. Weller's of London, was "extensive and peculiar" is amply demonstrated by the famous case of Bardell versus Pickwick. Students of that report may have been struck by the fact that neither plaintiff nor defendant appeared in the witness box. The explanation is that at that time parties "upon the record" were not competent witnesses, their interest in the case being regarded as too strong a temptation to, shall we say, inaccuracy. But had Dickens been a lawyer Mr. Winkle and his friends might also have been spared the ordeal of cross examination and their friends and admirers deprived of many merry moments.

In his anxiety to satirize the abuses of cross examination Dickens overlooked the legal rule that the counsel who calls a witness is not permitted to cross examine him at all, but, on the contrary, is bound by his answers; therefore had Serjeant Buzfuz permitted the Pickwickians to be called as witnesses for the plaintiff (which he would have known better than to do) their version of the words heard through the door "on the jar" must have been accepted, and at the first attempt to badger either of them it would have been the learned counsel for the plaintiff who received his lordship's injunction "to be careful."

But all lovers of Dickens will rejoice at his ignorance of the rule which forces counsel never to call a hostile witness. Who could bear to be deprived of the evidence of Mr. Samuel Weller?

Exactly the same mistake is made by Anthony Trollope in his well known novel, "The Three Clerks." There the hero, Alaric Tudor, is placed upon his trial for misappropriating trust money and defended by that famous leader, Mr. Chaffanbrass of the Old Bailey. Tudor's Mephistopheles, the Hon. Undecimus Scott, is called, much against his will, as a witness for the defense, cross examined by the celebrated Chaffanbrass, forced to confess his misdeeds and dismissed covered with ignominy, to be subsequently expelled from his club—poetic justice which would have been defeated even by a chairman of quarter sessions.

The great theoretical and practical knowledge of law possessed by Charles Reade saved him from this error, as from many others. Yet the famous trial scene in "Hard Cash" would have been ruthlessly deprived of its most dramatic moment by any judge of the high court. When the hapless Alfred Hardy, who has been wrongfully imprisoned in an asylum by his wicked father, comes at last to establish his sanity before a jury, his case is closed by the reading of a letter from his dead sister. Writing at the point of death, she solemnly denies his insanity and begs him to show her words to his accusers when she is no more. Read aloud by the judge himself, her letter reduces a crowded court to tears and goes far to secure her brother a triumphant verdict, with heavy damages.

"Hard Cash" is termed "a matter of fact romance;" but, as a matter of fact and law, no such letter could have been received in evidence. Knowing that, under ordinary circumstances, such testimony would be inadmissible, Reade is careful to establish that the writer knew herself to be dying; but he was unaware that a "dying declaration" is only admissible in evidence upon a charge of murder or manslaughter of the person who has made it, and cannot be laid before the jury in any other case whatever.

Numerous and entertaining are the trial scenes which adorn the works of Mrs. Henry Wood, but they hardly profess to be strictly accurate. Let me point, rather, to an interesting slip on the part of that most careful of novelists, David Christie Murray, who shares to some extent the popular confusion on the subject of the law of libel and slander. His powerful story, "A Capful o' Nails," has for its hero a working nailer, who becomes an agitator on behalf of his much oppressed class. In consequence of a speech denouncing an unscrupulous employer he is prosecuted on a charge of criminal libel; but, thanks to a faithful friend and a smart lawyer, he emerges triumphantly.

No fault can be found in this case with the way in which the villain is cross examined to pieces. The difficulty is that no such prosecution could have been instituted at all. You may slander a man by defamatory speech, but to libel him you must "write, print or otherwise permanently record" your defamation of him, and, though slander and libel alike may expose you to an action for damages, it is libel alone that can bring you within the grasp of the criminal law.

It is difficult to uphold this distinction. A libel is regarded as a public crime as well as a private wrong because it tends to provoke a breach of the peace, but one would think as much might be said of slander. Still the distinction exists, and the aggressor who confines his attack to words may suffer in purse, but not in person.

Such are a few of the slips to which the novelist is liable who unwarily trespasses upon legal preserves.—Pearson's Weekly.

WORKING WOMEN, WHAT THEY SHOULD KNOW

MRS. SADIE ABBOTT MRS. PREE McKITRICK

Women for the most part spend their lives at home, and it is these women who are willing and ambitious that their homes shall be kept neat and pretty, their children well dressed and tidy, who do their own cooking, sweeping, dusting and often washing, ironing and sewing for the entire family, who call for our sympathy.

Truly the work of such a woman is "never done" and is it any wonder that she breaks down at the end of a few years, the back begins to ache, there is a displacement, inflammation or ulceration of the abdominal organs, a female weakness is brought on, and the struggle of that wife and mother to continue her duties is pitiful.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, is the exact medicine a woman needs whose strength is overtaxed. It keeps the feminine organs in a strong and healthy condition. In preparing for childbirth and recuperating therefrom it is most efficient. It carries a woman safely through the change of life and in making her strong and well assists her to be a good wife and mother.

Mrs. Sadie Abbott, of Jeannette, Pa., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham—

"I suffered severely with pain every month and also a pain in my left side. My doctor prescribed for me but did me no good; a friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I wrote you in regard to my condition. I followed your advice and am a perfectly well woman. The pains have all disappeared and I cannot recommend your medicine too highly."

Mrs. Pree McKitrick, of La Farge, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"For six years I suffered from female weakness. I was so irregular that I would go from three weeks to six months, so I thought I would give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

"Now I am once more well and can do my work without a pain. Any one who wishes, can write to me and I will answer all letters gladly."

Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound holds the record for the greatest number of actual cures of female ills. Every suffering woman in the United States is asked to accept the following invitation. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

A MUSTARD POULTICE.

It Made a Lot of Trouble and Didn't Cure the Cold.

Lord Carrington used to be a great practical joker, but he was once the victim of his own reputation. According to the Dundee Advertiser, he was at a hotel in Cape Town. In the same hotel were a young couple, and, the husband having a bad cold, the wife left her room to obtain for him the solace of a mustard poultice. She left him asleep and, thinking she knew her way, descended the stairs and, procuring a particularly virulent concoction, made her way back to her room. But doors are much alike in hotels, and, seeing one ajar, as she had left her own, she entered. Creeping quietly to the bedside, she saw, as she thought, the form of her sleeping lord and master. Hastily bending over him, she placed the fatal irritant upon his chest.

No sooner had she done so than a movement of the sleeper revealed, to her horror, that she had made a terrible mistake. Too frightened to recapture the incriminating poultice, she fled from the room and, rushing down the passage, discovered her own door and bolted herself in. It was but a minute, and the storm broke. The hotel was in an uproar. The mustard poultice had been placed on the chest of the elderly governor general! The explosion of his wrath, his howls of rage as the mustard did its work, brought servants and manager to his bedside. The situation did not permit of an explanation. Furious with indignation, he declared himself the victim of a gross joke, and the efforts of the maitre d'hotel to pacify him were in vain. He swore that the practical joker was nobody else than Lord Carrington, and he next day, fuming and indignant, left the place. So did a very contrite young wife and a husband whose cold was no better.

JAWS AS WEAPONS.

Chief Means of Defense Among All Old World Apes.

Among all old world apes the teeth are the chief weapons for defense against natural foes and for combats for mates or tribal supremacy. The canines are in most cases enormously developed, insomuch that ill informed naturalists have suggested that a near relationship must exist between the primates and the carnivora. As a matter of fact, these formidable teeth have nothing to do with alimentation, but are as purely weapons of war as are the bayonet and the Maxim gun. In practically every emergency demanding unusual energy, obstinacy and courage they come into play.

In every conflict with the world, the flesh and the devil—as such things are understood in pithecoid society—the temporal and masseter muscles are the chief arbiters of war. To become a great and powerful anthropoid it is absolutely and brutally necessary to have a large and strong jaw, to give them attachment to the teeth and good leverage to the muscles. That for an immense epoch our prehuman ancestors achieved success in life in like manner is as clear as the print of "Maga" to those who have learned to read nature's handwriting.

Since those days of true Arcadian simplicity our life has become bewilderingly complex and our methods for settling social difficulties have changed generally for the better. But here, as in so many other instances, the habits of a past age have left an indelible impress on the nervous system.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Her Namesake.

When Mrs. Lombard heard that the baby of her former cook had been named for her she bought a suitable rattle with many jingling bells and went to see her namesake.

"Why, Bridget," she said to the late Miss Leahy, now Mrs. O'Sullivan, "I thought you said the baby was named for me. My name is Hannah, and you are calling the baby Celestine."

"Celestine L., ma'am," said Mrs. O'Sullivan hastily. "The 'L' is for Lombard, and Celestine is just a koind of a name to describe you, ma'am. There ain't anny Hannah to your looks, Mrs. Lombard; anny wan would tell you that."—Youth's Companion.

A Remarkable Fortress.

In the northern part of Madagascar is the most remarkable natural fortress in the world. It is occupied by a wild tribe who call themselves the people of the rocks. The fortress is a lofty and precipitous rock of enormous size, 1,000 feet high and eight square miles in area. Its sides are so steep that it cannot be climbed without artificial means. Within it is hollow, and the only entrance is by a subterranean passage.

Origin of the Sidesaddle.

The use of the sidesaddle for women riders is traced to the time of Anne of Bohemia, eldest daughter of the emperor of Germany, who married Richard II. of England. Previous to this date all Englishwomen bestrode their horses man fashion, but on account of a deformity this German bride was forced to use a sidesaddle, and the custom became general.

A Plea For Cannibalism.

Bronson Alcott, the Concord philosopher, once made a strong and almost unanswerable plea for cannibalism. "If you are going to eat meat at all," argued the Yankee Plato, "why not eat the best?"

The Way to Get a Chance.

It may not be to the credit of mankind, but in this world no man is "given" a chance. If he wants a chance he has to throw it down and sit on its neck.

Beware of looking at sin, for at each view it is apt to become better looking.—Success Magazine.

If doctors fail thee, be these thy doctors—rest, cheerfulness and moderate diet.—Latin Proverb.

Pinole.

Pinole is a Mexican corn dainty. The corn is roasted, ground to a coarse meal, mixed with sugar and spices and then stirred with water. It is very nutritious and often forms the sole food of travelers on long journeys.

The Pipe.

The tobacco pipe in its present form is said to have been invented by Dr. Villarius in 1690.

Battle of Hanging Rock.

The battle of Hanging Rock was fought near a natural feature of scenery of that name in South Carolina, Aug. 6, 1780. The British were defeated by Sumter. This was the first battle in which Andrew Jackson took part.

NEW THEORY IN MARVIN CASE.

Detective Thinks Boy Was Killed and Body Concealed.

Dover, Del., April 24.—A new move has been made in the Marvin case, based upon the theory of Detective Lora of New Jersey. A deckhand employed on a steamer running between Lebanon, Del., and Philadelphia, was arrested, but he denied that he had anything to do with the disappearance of the child.

The deckhand worked on the Marvin farm, helping in the transfer of the household goods, the day that the child disappeared. Detective Lora's theory is that the boy, while climbing about the wagon, fell, and was killed, and that the men, fearing they would be blamed, concealed the body and later made away with it.

FULLER.

April 21. — On the evening of the 20th inst. about 45 invited guests assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Geen, of this place, to celebrate with them the fifteenth anniversary of their wedding day. The invited company consisting of their immediate relatives. Those from a distance were Rev. and Mrs. A. L. Geen, of Belleville; Mr. and Mrs. H. Mouck, of Belleville, grandparents of the groom; Mrs. Albert Geen and family, of Tweed, and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Parks, of Halston. After the assembling the guests adjourned to a large table neatly arranged where ample justice was done to a sumptuous repast provided. The dining-room was artistically decorated with flowers and evergreens. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful, costly and useful presents. A very enjoyable evening was spent in games and music. After all being satisfied with the well spent night wished the happy couple many happy and prosperous years of wedlock. They then sang that familiar hymn; "Blest be the Tie That Binds."

On Wednesday evening, April 10th, about one hundred of the friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Rose, unceremoniously entered their home and treated them to an old-fashioned surprise party, as they are about to leave for their new home in Belleville. The most pleasing feature of the evening was the presentation by Mrs. J. Wilson and Mrs. G. Cadman of a half dozen dining-room chairs and a beautiful couch, and Flossie and Morris each a Methodist hymn-book, accompanied by an address read by Rev. Mr. Thompson. Mr. and Mrs. Rose thanked the donors for their beautiful gifts, and after partaking of an ample luncheon, provided by the ladies, the crowd dispersed, wishing Mr. and Mrs. Rose many long and happy years in their new home.

A reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Adam Lloyd on Thursday evening, April 11th, by the groom's mother upon their arrival after their wedding at Egan Creek. About forty guests were present and games and music were in vogue during a most pleasant evening. They are about to reside in Maynooth as Mr. Lloyd is engaged as cheesemaker. Too Anxious by Half.

A vast number of people are needlessly anxious about their manners. Having been "house folks" all their lives, contentedly and usefully rounding out their days among kindred and neighbors who love and understand them and share their standards, says an editorial in the Home Journal, they are prone when they make a rare excursion into another atmosphere to a painful self consciousness that spoils their pleasures.

Travel is not at all necessary to culture. Some of the finest culture the world has ever seen owed nothing to travel. But there is one comfortable result of travel, and that is the assurance it gives that people are pretty much alike. The superficial traveler may be impressed by "how different" things abroad are from those at home, but the wise observer is always being newly made aware how much the same are things the world over.

So with the gift of tongues. One of the best services it does for us is to show how much in common different people have when they can understand each other. History is another help. The deeper into the past the student delves the more wonderfully he realizes how little time has altered human nature. And as for exalted rank and superior talents, it seems as if every one ought to enjoy the advantage of informal association with at least one celebrity, if only to prove how little real difference fame or splendor makes.

Knowing these things keeps one delightfully free from that diffidence which prevents many persons from appearing well in strange society and from getting that best of the stranger which he can give only to one with whom he can be at ease. When it comes to manners there are very few things, after all, that are essential, and more people make an awkward appearance because they are too concerned about their manners than err in the other extreme. An absorbed interest in another individual, an eager desire to learn how his experience of life corroborates or transcends our own, a sweet willingness to give of our best toward the pleasurableness of the occasion—these are much better beginnings in good manners than are all the etiquette books in creation.

The way to enjoy other people is to think as little as possible of any points in which they may differ from us and as much as possible of the many points in which they must resemble us. And as for which fork to eat fish with, and whether to leave one card or two, and what to say to a hostess when presented—what folly to agonize oneself into a cold perspiration over these things when if we but knew the truth we should find that about four-fifths of those present had no more settled convictions on the subject than we. And if we could see the knowing fifth neatly roped off from the rest we should find fewer of the great, the interesting, the delightful among them than among the others. Great men eat with the wrong fork quite as often as do shy girls from the country.

Javelle Water.

Javelle water is sold by most druggists, but it is not difficult to make and is much less expensive when prepared at home. Every laundress should use it, as it is effective in keeping linen and children's dresses free from fruit stains. A small teacup of the fluid added to a boiler of water will assist materially in keeping the clothes white and will not hurt them in the least.

The most obstinate stains of fruit, tea, coffee, etc., in the tablecloth and napkins will succumb to an application of one part of javelle water diluted with four parts of soft water. If the stained article is soaked in this fluid for several hours, thoroughly washed and rinsed it will usually come out perfectly white and clean. Only white goods can be treated this way, however, as javelle water is likely to fade colors.

It is made thus: Place four pounds of washing soda in a large granite or porcelain lined pan and pour over it four quarts of hot water. Stir with a stick until the soda has dissolved, add a pound of chloride of lime and stir until this has dissolved. Allow the liquid to cool in the pan, strain the portion through a thin cloth into wide mouth jugs or bottles and cork tightly for use. The part that contains the sediment also may be bottled and used for cleaning the sink, kitchen table, etc.

The Lopsided Habit.

The girl was tugging her chiffonier across the room when a friend dropped in unceremoniously and demanded an explanation. "That's the third time you've changed that piece of furniture in so many months. I'd like to know the reason for such foolishness."

The girl gave the chiffonier a final shove into the corner and then said gaspingly: "In order that I may be beautiful on all sides. Sherlock Holmes is to blame for it. You know he pointed out that the side of the body which the light struck the most clearly is always dressed the most immaculately. He showed that on that side the hair would be most artistically curled, the powder most carefully applied, the neckwear most painstakingly adjusted.

"And I've found out a lot more things he didn't speak of. On that side a woman will pencil her eyebrows more cleverly, will massage her face more thoroughly, will put in her side comb more neatly, etc. So every month I shove my chiffonier across the room that I may not become lopsided."

About Flatirons.

Flatirons that are put away for a few weeks often get rusty, and the best way to prevent this is to rub a little warm grease over the surface and then wrap them up in brown paper. When taken out dip into hot water that has had a small piece of soda dissolved in it, rub dry and then put them to heat in the usual way. When they are ready to be used on the ironing board have a piece of brown paper with a little powdered bath brick on it and rub the surface of your iron with this. It seems rather a lengthy process, but it really does not take long to do, and housewives will be rewarded for the trouble they have taken by finding the irons delightfully smooth and easy to use, and when they are like this the work can be done twice as quickly.

The Baby Baskets.

Nothing is better for a baby basket than a wire dish drainer, either round or oblong in shape. They only cost 10 cents at any store where kitchen goods are sold. Cover the wire with blue cambric or blue satin first. Over that place white dotted or plain muslin, rather full. Make a deep ruffle edged with baby lace to fall over the outside. Cut out a piece of cardboard to fit the bottom. Cover it with a layer of cotton batting. Cover with the cambric and then the muslin.

Sprinkle sachet powder on the cotton batting if one cares to have the basket scented. Make little pockets and pincushion to fasten on the sides. Around the top edge sew beading with ribbon run through it. The wire frame is durable and light.

Introduction Customs.

In introducing a woman and a man the latter should be presented to the former, as, for instance, Mrs. Jones, allow me to present Mr. Smith. In the case of two women, one elderly, the younger should be presented to the elder as a pretty mark of respect, as, Mrs. Jones, my friend, Miss Brown. In the event of one party to the introduction being an elderly man of prominence it would be proper to show him the deference and present both a man and woman if younger to him.

A Dainty Sandwich.

A very pleasant and healthy variation of the meat, jam, egg or lettuce sandwich can be made with the assistance of the nutritious currant. Take a teacupful of currants and rub them in a cloth; then butter rather thickly some thin slices of bread. Cover the buttered bread all over with currants, sift a very little castor sugar over them and make into sandwiches. This satisfying little novelty is wonderfully appreciated and will not fail to delight the children.

To turn out a hot pudding plunge the mold or bag into cold water for thirty seconds. If it is a cold pudding, a jelly or blancmange, dip it for an instant in very hot water. If ice cream refuses to leave a mold after being loosened wrap for an instant around the mold a cloth wrung from boiling hot water.

To clean zinc dip a piece of flannel in paraffin and with it well rub the zinc, which should then be washed with hot water and soap to remove the smell of the oil and polished with a dry cloth.

When running brass rods through window curtains put an old glove finger over the end that is being pushed through the hem. Unless this is done the material is apt to tear.

A dyspeptic can eat and retain raw eggs when nothing else will stay on the stomach.

A Nice Legal Distinction.

A lawyer in the Indian Territory named McGann was the attorney for a farmer who had killed a neighbor. McGann got the man out on bail on the plea of justifiable homicide or something of the kind, and the farmer immediately took his gun and killed the chief witness against him.

Naturally this nettled the sheriff and the judges, and they offered $300 reward for the murderous farmer. "Say," said McGann to the sheriff, "will you give me that reward if I get him?" "Yes," the sheriff replied, and McGann rode out to the hiding place of his client.

The farmer came up, and McGann shot him, took the body back to town and demanded the reward. "How about this, McGann?" asked another lawyer. "Do you think it is in accordance with the ethics of the legal profession to take advantage of your client in that manner?" "Ethics be blowed!" snorted McGann. "I killed him in another case."—Exchange.

Sagacity of Blind Horses.

The way in which blind horses can go about without getting into more difficulties than they ordinarily do is very remarkable. They rarely, if ever, hit their heads against a fence or stone wall. They will slide off when they come near one. It appears from careful observation that it is neither shade nor shelter which warns them of the danger. On an absolutely sunless and windless day their behavior is the same. Their olfactory nerves doubtless become very sensitive, for, when driving them, they will poke their heads downward in search of water fifty yards before they come to a stream crossing the roadway. It cannot be an abnormally developed sense of hearing which leads them to do this, for they will act alike though the water be a stagnant pool. Men who have been blind for any great length of time develop somewhat similar instincts to blind horses.

French Similes For "Drunk."

The French have some interesting similes of their own corresponding to the English "drunk as a lord" or "drunk as a wheelbarrow," says a London writer. The most generally recognized one in the case of "ivre," the less extreme and less vulgar word for drunk," is "ivre comme une soupe" —"soupe" meaning the piece of bread eaten with soup as well as the soup itself, and a bouillon soaked piece of bread offering a natural simile for saturation. When the less delicate "soul" is used instead of "ivre," the Frenchman may speak of being as drunk as an ass, a cow, a Swiss or a thrush. The allusion in the last case is to the fondness of thrushes for grapes, which are said at vintage time to make them unsteady in their flight.

Worse Inside Than Out.

"If you should visit a Japanese house," said an oriental, "you would be obliged to remove your shoes at the doorway. Japanese floors are very beautifully kept. I know of some houses where thirty or forty servants have no other duty than the polishing of the floors. A young Japanese student, studying in London, had the misfortune to live in an apartment-house where the janitor did not keep the hall in very good condition. It was a great change to him, and he felt it keenly. On the approach of winter the janitor put up in the entrance the notice, 'Please wipe your feet.' The young Japanese, the first night he observed this notice, took out a pencil and added to it, 'On going out.'"

A Tale of Red Tape.

Among the tales of red tape the following should hold a high place: M. Roger Cavailhon, a young French gentleman rider, who had won his hundredth steeplechase, was drawn for the conscription and had to serve for a year. He asked to be placed in the cavalry, explaining with due modesty that he was not unknown as a horseman. The military council of revision refused the request on the ground that as his period of service was only one year he would not have time to learn to ride.

A Strong Reason.

The bookkeeper of a sportsmen's publication received a letter one day from an old subscriber stating that he had long read it with interest and was aware that it was time to renew his subscription, but did not wish to do so, as he would not need it in the future. It was not noticed that the postmark was that of a town in which a state prison is located, but the postscript was eloquent. It said, "P. S.—I am to be hanged next week."

In a Studio.

"I ordered you to paint me some cows in a stable. I see the stable, but where are the cows?"

"They are in the stable."

"So is your pay for this picture. You had better bring both out."—Saeta.

Conjugal Pleasantry.

Mrs. Benham—The good book tells us that we must not covet our neighbors' wives. Benham—Well, I guess there isn't much commandment breaking on your account.

One of the Mysteries.

One of the mysteries of the world is that which leads a man to tackle a second cigar after the agonizing experiences with the first one.

What Lazy Means.

Teacher—Bobby, what does lazy mean? Bobby—Lazy means always to want your little sister to get it for you.

MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve, the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

Belleville Imperial Club Honored St. George's Day

BANQUET LAST NIGHT WHICH HAD MANY EXCEEDINGLY ENJOYABLE FEATURES — ELOQUENT SPEECHES AND DAINTY VIANDS — THOSE PRESENT.

Under the auspices of the Belleville Canadian Imperial Club, St. George's Day was last evening fittingly celebrated by a gathering of the members and a few friends at the Club's quarters on Bridge street. It proved to be an evening of rare enjoyment and sociability. A bountiful spread was provided and heartily partaken of. Mr. Thos. Ritchie presided over the gathering in a capable manner. At the conclusion of the repast the following toast list was most successfully carried out, and many able addresses were delivered;

THE TOAST LIST.

"The King" — The National Anthem, by the company.

"Merry England (The Land we Left) and St. George" — Responded to most appropriately by Messrs. Walter Alford, H. Sneyd, Chief Newton and C. M. Stork. The two latter, during their remarks, spoke in favor of the re-organization of the St. George's Society, a society which, when it existed, did much good.

"Canada, the Land We Live In" — Col. Ponton was the first speaker and his address was the relationship of Canada to the Motherland. As one of the young colonies, Canada was beloved by the Motherland, and this was demonstrated by the fact that Canada is protected by the British Navy. The Colonel waxed eloquent in reciting the many deeds of chivalry displayed by Englishmen upon the battle field and sea.

Rev. R. C. Blagrave also responded to the toast and did so in a most appropriate manner. He said he was a Canadian, and was proud to belong to such a country. It was a land of bounty, a land that had much mineral wealth within its borders, a land of picturesque beauty, a land that is the most sparkling jewel in the British crown. As character is to make Canada what it shall be, it is desirable that true characters should be built up. Canada was a country of industry and it must be developed along industrial lines. The strike idea is abroad and industries were in some cases being crippled, and when strikes do this they are not right or just. It is the duty of the Government to see to it that industries are not hindered by strikes. In concluding the Rev. gentleman waxed eloquent and said we had a heritage which was great and one we should be proud of. Hold up Canada, remember the standard under which we lived and should be ready even to die for, if such was necessary.

"The Emerald Isle, and St. Patrick" —Ex-Mayor Johnson was first called upon to respond to this toast. The speaker in his opening remarks referred to Canada and the fact that this country should do its share towards maintaining the expense of the militia and navy. In speaking of the Imperial Conference which is now taking place in London, Eng., Mr. Johnson said that when the first Imperial Conference was held in Canada in 1894, Sir Mackenzie Bowell was the originator of that Conference. Each man has some part in the building of the Empire, and building for its strength. In Canada the various nationalities are united. Englishmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen as a united people are the builders of the great Empire.

Mr. J. Elliott said the glory of England had been made possible by Irishmen and Scotchmen uniting with Englishmen in the defence of the British Isle. England was proud of its Nelson, Ireland of Wellington and Scotland of Bruce.

"Scotland and St. Andrew" — This toast was replied to by Col. Stewart, R. Tannahill and Dr. MacColl, all of whom did credit to it. The last speaker, referring to the medical profession, noted the fact that Canadian physicians were to-day occupying positions of great trust in the world at large.

"The Mother of Parliaments and Her Canadian Offspring" — Responded to by Mr. E. G. Sills, ex-M.P.P.

"Our City" — Mayor Sulman, in responding to the toast, referred to the fact that the city was progressing and the population was increasing.

"The Empire's Defenders" — Col. Dr. Farley and Capt. D. Barragar responded to this toast, doing credit to the topic and to themselves.

"The Learned Professions" — This toast was spoken to by Drs. Gibson and Mather, who referred to the medical profession as a boon to mankind.

"Our Host" — Mr. Walter Alford was called upon and spoke briefly, but in an appropriate manner.

During the evening Messrs. Walter Alford and Chief Newton each sang two appropriate songs.

LETTERS OF REGRET.

Letters of regret at inability to be present were read from Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw; Mr. R. Weddell, Trenton; R. Mathison, Toronto, and Rev. W. B. Heeney.

THOSE PRESENT.

Those in attendance were Mayor Sulman, ex-Mayor Johnson, Police Magistrate Masson, Chief Newton, Col. Stewart, Col. Ponton, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, Drs. Farley, Gibson, Mather and MacColl, and Messrs. W. S. Morden, C. M. Stork, Water Alford, T. Ritchie, J. Elliott, T. Whiteley, E. G. Sills, H. Sneyd, G. Wallbridge, S. W. Vermilyea, T. Tannahill, A. O. Marshall, F. S. Deacon, D. Barragar and A. A. Roberts.

The singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and the National Anthem brought the proceedings to a close.

The First Parade

The Fifteenth Regiment had its first parade of the season last night, and the turnout, all things considered, was fairly creditable. Lt.-Col. Stewart was in command, and the Regiment, headed by its two bands, marched from the market square up Front St. and Queen Victoria avenue to the Hospital lot, where the men were drilled for about an hour. For the first drill of the season the men did fairly well. They will march better before inspection day comes.

The Regimental Band, under Bandmaster Carey, is now one of the finest features of the Fifteenth. On the march on Front St. last night the Band played admirable marching music, and showed a marked improvement over the form displayed last year. They played with snap and precision. Evidently Mr. Carey, a former bandmaster "in the regulars," is strictly "on the job," and has licked his bunch of young musicians into decidedly promising shape.

The Drum and Bugle Band, too, though not out in force, played in excellent style, and promise to give a fine account of themselves before the season is over.

Numerically the parade was, for the first of the season, the best on record, and everybody, from the Colonel down to the smallest bugler, seemed properly enthused and very much in earnest. The prospects are for one of the best, if not the best, drill seasons in the history of the Fifteenth.

When the Regiment arrived back on the market square the Colonel complimented the bands on their music and the men for the showing they had made on the first parade of the season.

The sidewalks and road in the vicinity of the Hospital lot were crowded with spectators. It takes the redcoats to attract them.

The next parade is on Friday night.

Deaths.

YARWOOD. — At her residence, 222 George street, Belleville, on Tuesday, the 23rd day of April, 1907, Mary Helen Yarwood, widow of the late C. St. George Yarwood, Esquire, in her 71st year.

Funeral will take place from her late residence at 2.30 o'clock on the afternoon of Friday, the 26th instant, to St. Thomas' Church, thence to Belleville cemetery.

At Sign of the Scales.

FINED FOR ALLEGED OBSTRUCTION.

Police Magistrate Masson yesterday afternoon gave judgment in the case against Geo. A. Bennett and H. Leverton, who were found guilty of obstructing the streets of the city by neglecting to move a house. In view of the fact that at the time the house was being moved and near its destination, His Worship said he would take that into consideration and not impose as large a fine as he would had no further efforts been made to move the structure. He fined each party $3 without costs.

Died In Hungerford.

The death occurred in Hungerford on April 16th, 1907, of Florence Sayers wife of John K. Maines, aged 26 years. She had been ill for a year and a half with consumption. She was the youngest daughter of Robert Sayers, ex-Reeve of Hungerford, and is survived by her husband and two little girls, as well as her father, two brothers and one sister. The funeral was held on Friday 12th inst. from her late home to Bethel Methodist church, were service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. Robt. Barns, of Tweed. The pall-bearers were Messrs. R. J. Graham, W. E. Graham, H. Mouck, W. H. Hicks, Andrew Cranson and Joseph Bateman.

All liver and stomach troubles cured by Miller's Granules. Sold by J. S. McKeown.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"PAINTING THE TOWN."

"Painting the Town," which played an engagement at the Carman earlier in the season, and proved to be one of the funniest and most entertaining plays ever seen here, is booked for a return engagement next Friday, and without doubt a crowded house will welcome it back, for seldom, if ever, has an attraction given such universal satisfaction to our theatre patrons. The same excellent cast, headed by those two very clever comedians, Halliday and Leonard, assisted by Miss Mazie King, Miss Edith Lowe, Miss Louise Sanford, the Trans-Atlantic Four, "that great singing act," and an exceptionally strong singing chorus.

Immigrant Charged With Wife Desertion

Police Officer Hayes went to Toronto at an early hour this morning and returned to the city this afternoon, having in custody one David J. Batchelor, who was yesterday arrested in the Queen City at the request of Chief Newton.

It appears that Batchelor, who is an Englishman and a late arrival in the city, is married and has a family. On Sunday afternoon during his wife's temporary absence, he left the house, and as he did not return it was surmised that he had left the city, and such proved to be the case. The wife also felt confident that her husband did not go away alone, but was accompanied by a young English woman who frequently visited Batchelor's home. It was ascertained that the young woman left the city on Sunday for parts unknown. A warrant was caused to be issued for the arrest of Batchelor on the charge of deserting his wife and family. A description of Batchelor was sent to Toronto and other places, with the result that he was located in Toronto.

Consecon Native Dead.

Mr. P. G. Kemp, of Toronto, died on April 15. He was born in Consecon, and later went to Codrington and lived there until 1871. In 1866 he married Miss Mattie Ketchum, of Brighton with whom he lived until his decease. In 1872 he and his brother, the late Mr. C. B. Kemp, went into business at Brighton, carrying it on until he removed to Toronto seventeen years ago, where he embarked in the manufacturing of light beverages, which business will now pass into the hands of his only son. His remains were interred at Brighton.

S. O. E. "At Home."

The "at home" given last night by the two local S.O.E. lodges, in honor of St. George's day, was slimly attended, but an enjoyable time was spent. Dancing was the principal amusement.

Former Bellevillian Given Travelling Case

On Saturday, April 13, the office of the Rathbun Company, at Deseronto, asked Charles Macdonald to accept a handsome travelling case, as a parting gift from those among whom he had been employed. An address accompanied the presentation, to which Mr. Macdonald replied briefly, thanking the donors for their good wishes. Mr. Macdonald leaves shortly for Grand Vallee, where he goes into the office of the Dominion Lumber Company.

Mr. Macdonald, who is mentioned above is a former Belleville boy. He, with his estimable wife, is now visiting his parents in this city before leaving for Grand Vallee.

Headaches Mean Your Blood Is Poisoned

If your bowels, kidneys or skin are not ridding the system of waste-matter, the blood is laden with impurities, which inflame the nerves. It is these irritated nerves that make the head ache.

Powders and pills won't cure, they merely drug the nerves into unconciousness and relieve for a short time.

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Headaches, Neuralgia and Nerve Pains because they purify the blood. They act directly on the three great eliminating organs—Bowels, Kidneys and Skin—and restore them to healthy action, thus ridding the system of all poisons.

"Fruit-a-tives" are fruit juices—chemically changed, by the process of combining them, into a far more effective medicinal compound than the natural juices. 50c. a box—6 for $2.50. At all dealers' or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

LONGBOAT IS HONORED.

An Enthusiastic Reception Given to Plucky Marathon Winner.

Toronto, April 24.—One of the greatest receptions ever tendered an athletic hero was given to Longboat, the fleet Indian runner, on his arrival home last night from his victory in the Boston Marathon roadrace.

The route of the procession was lined by thousands of men and women anxious to catch a glimpse of him.

When the train pulled into the Union Station there was a tremendous rush for the platform, where the Indian and his trainer, Ashley, were secured and fairly carried to the front entrance, where several bands and a torchlight procession half a mile long was waiting to conduct them to the City Hall.

At the City Hall he was received by Mayor Coatsworth and the members of the council. Complimentary speeches were given, and Longboat was presented with a medal in commemoration of his victory. As a lasting token of the gratitude of the city he will be given a grant of $5,000 to assist him in obtaining an education.

A reception and banquet was afterwards tendered him.

House Votes Against Enforcement of Act by Government.

Hon. Mr. Aylesworth Refuses to Consider the Suggestion—Cannot Enforce Its Own Laws—Mr. W. F. Maclean Exposes the Absurdity—Bitter Pill for Western Liberal Members.

Ottawa, April 24.—The House yesterday went squarely on record by a party vote as opposing the enforcement of the Railway Act by the Federal Government.

It was Hon. Mr. Aylesworth who, Monday stripped the provinces of all control over railway corporations, and who, yesterday protested that the Federal Government should not be required to control these same corporations.

It was a bitter pill for the western Liberal members, who have been flooded with letters and telegrams from the constituents, driven at most to revolution by their mistreatment at the hands of the railway companies. These members, however, were compelled to acquiesce in the decision that Federal laws cannot be executed by the Federal Government.

It is significant that no Ontario Liberal, representing a constituency crossed by the G. T. R., voted for this amendment, although if carried it would have devolved upon the Government the duty of obtaining two cents a mile railway fare for their constituents.

The matter came up yesterday morning upon Mr. Aylesworth's bill to amend the Railway Act. Its real purpose is to permit the employment of Mr. Shepley and other counsel before the Railway Commission in its investigation into the schedule of tolls filed by the express and telephone companies under the legislation of last session.

Mr. Aylesworth's Excuse.

W. F. Maclean (South York), having given notice of his intention to move an amendment requiring the Minister of Justice to enforce the provisions of the Railway Act, and of their own charters against the railway companies, Mr. Aylesworth pointed out that it was unreasonable to expect this Government to enforce the Federal law as Federal laws were enforced by the United States Government. In the United States were Federal courts. These could not exist in Canada without changing our constitution. We had gotten through 40 years of existence with the present B. N. A. Act. If it was so unsatisfactory to certain gentlemen, let them propose an address to the King.

Referring to the case in point, Mr. Aylesworth said that, supposing that as one of the witnesses a company put in their manager, it was necessary that he should be cross-examined, and such cross-examination to be effective should not be the ordinary fireworks of the Police Court, but should be conducted by some one instructed in technical knowledge and in a position to bring out of a hostile witness facts which otherwise might not be elicited.

After commenting upon this remarkable mis-statement, as the British North America Act explicitly provides for the creation of Federal courts and the enforcement of Federal laws by the Dominion Government, Mr. Maclean (South York) said that it was idle for the Minister of Justice to humbug the country by claiming that our Federal statutes couldn't be enforced without an act of the Imperial Parliament.

Charged to Fulfil Law.

He read from the act creating the Department of Justice, and by the terms of which the Minister, as Attorney-General, is charged with the duty of superintending the execution of the law.

Mr. Maclean challenged the Minister of Justice to state any reason why this country alone among the nations of the world was unable to enforce its own laws.

"True, Mr. Aylesworth says that he is willing to enforce the law if he is asked to do so by the Railway Commission," agreed the speaker, "but the Commision is a judicial body not responsible to Parliament. This is a responsible Government, a political Government, and we have a right to have some member of the Government responsible."

Revenue and Right.

"It is a curious situation," continued Mr. Maclean, "that the Customs Act is vigorously enforced by this Government. Evidently collecting the revenue is considered more important than protecting public rights."

Dr. Sproule feared that the bill was a step towards turning the Railway Commission into a court so that suitors couldn't be heard without going to the expense of employing counsel.

Mr. Bergeron suggested that the Solicitor-General was idle. Why not direct him to appear before the Railway Commission.

The Division.

Upon third reading he offered an amendment to the bill providing that the Attorney-General should enforce the Railway Act, and employ counsel, if necessary, and should institute all such proceedings, civil or criminal, that might be necessary to enforce the law to punish violations thereof or to collect fines and penalties thereunder. The amendment was defeated by a party vote. Yeas 38, nays 80.

An amendment moved by R. L. Borden requiring the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General to appear before and assist the Railway Commission, was defeated by the same division, and the bill passed.

Patching the Cabinet.

Ottawa, April 24.—Although there can be no formal Cabinet appointments until the return of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the leaders are busy preparing the Cabinet for him.

As Mr. Hyman will not return, it is agreed that Speaker Sutherland will enter the Cabinet, probably as Minister of Agriculture, Sydney Fisher assuming Public Works.

Mr. Marcil, the Deputy Speaker, cannot become Speaker, as a French-Canadian, Hon. Mr. Dandurand, is Speaker of the Senate. It is, therefore, settled that Arch. Campbell will be the Speaker for the next session, and then probably go to the Senate.

It is announced that Premier Pugsley of New Brunswick will not be put in charge of railways or of any other spending department. He may enter the Cabinet without portfolio. Neither will Mr. Carvel secure this coverted position. He may, however, succeed Sir Frederick Borden as Minister of Militia, thus clearing the way for the almost certain appointment of E. M. Macdonald as Minister of Railways.

Opposition to Pugsley.

St. John, N. B., April 24.—Premier Pugsley will not have it all his own way by any means at the Liberal convention on Friday night.

Already, Mayor Edward Sears has announced his intention of contesting for the nomination. Failing in this, he will not, however, be a third candidate in the bye-election if a Conservative should take the field.

Dissatisfaction in the party is shown in the complaint that an old Conservative has been made Lieutenant-Governor; an old Conservative has been given an important commercial position in South Africa; an old Conservative has been made Senator, and finally, an old Conservative is being put forward by the Liberal organization.

EMPIRE NAVAL DEFENCE.

No Monetary Contribution From Colonies to Creation of Central Staff.

London, April 24—(C. A. P.)—"That conference welcomes and cordially approves of the exposition of the general principles embodied in the statement of the Secretary of State for War, and without wishing to commit any of the Governments represented, recognizes and affirms need of the development for the service of the Empire, of a general staff selected from the forces of the Empire as a whole, which shall study military science in all its branches; shall collect and disseminate to the various Governments military information and intelligence; shall undertake the preparation of schemes of defence on a common principle and without in the least interfering with questions connected with the command or administration shall at the request of the representative Governments advise as to the training, education and war organization of the military forces of the crown in every part of the Empire."

At yesterday's sitting of the Colonial Conference the foregoing resolution was agreed upon, which means there will be no monetary contribution to the creation of a central staff on which the self-governing dependencies can be represented if they so choose.

Admiralty and the Colonies.

The conference in addition to the resolution respecting the general staff for Empire, as already cabled in an official report issued last evening, announce the following:

"The First Lord of the Admiralty explained the general principles upon which the Admiralty held that the defence of the Empire should be organized. He specially insisted on the necessity for unity in the control of the fleet, and explained that the one aim of the Admiralty was to maintain the naval forces on such scale as to ensure retention of the command of the sea in any reasonably probable contingency. He stated that he did not desire to press for further contributions of men or money, but cordially welcomed the co-operation of the colonies in a form most agreeable to themselves. Whether the colonies contributed or not, the Admiralty would do its best to secure them from over-sea attack.

"After general discussion, it was decided that the question of naval defence should be adjourned, the colonial representatives being meanwhile invited to confer separately with the Admiralty regarding the position of their respective colonies.."

The conference adjourned until Thursday.

A Mother's Message to Mothers.

WHAT ZAM-BUK DID FOR HER CHILD.

"If this statement is the means of leading some mother to introduce Zam-Buk to her home, I shall be very glad." So says Mrs. K. Watkins, of 26 Forgue Avenue, Montreal, and continues: "My boy, Walter (9), whils attending school, contracted some sores. These spread and became so bad that some of them on the heel and ankle made it almost impossible for him to walk. I used various ointments, but the sores persisted. One day Zam-Buk was recommended, and we got a supply. It seemed to take the soreness out of the place to which it was applied right away, and the wounds began to heal. In about a week's time, the sores, which had defied other treatment, were completely healed, and there is now not a trace of sore on his body! I believe Zam-Buk to be the best balm ever produced."

When a mother rubs on to the delicate skin of children a balm or salve, she needs to be as careful as if she were giving a child an internal remedy. Zam-Buk is pure—free from all animal fat and all mineral matter, and may be applied with wonderful benefit even to the skin of young babes. Zam-Buk heals sores, cures eczema, spring skin eruptions, ulcers, ringworm, itch, barber's rash, blood poison, bad leg, salt rheum, abrasions, abscesses, cuts, burns, scalds, and all skin injuries and diseases. Of all stores and druggists at 50 cents, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. 6 boxes for $2.50. Baseball players and athletes find it best embrocation.

Exporters.

Not many shipping cattle on sale, and it was fortunate for those having them that they were not on the market, as few, if any, are wanted for several days, as space is scarce. A few lots were sold at $4.90 to $5.25, and one lot of 7 at $5.35; the bulk, which was not large, sold around $5 to $5.10. Bulls sold at $3.75 to $4 per cwt.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots sold at $4.90 to $5, with one lot at $5.15; loads of good at $4.60 to $4.90; medium $4.40 to $4.60; good cows, $4 to $4.40; medium cows, $3.50 to $3.85; common cows, $2.75 to $3.30; bulls at $3 to $4 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

H. Murby reports not much trading in stockers and feeders to-day. There were very few fresh arrivals of stockers, but there were more than enough held overs to supply the demand. The call is very limited for light, medium and common stockers, and they are hard to cash. Mr. Murby bought about 100 cattle to-day, weighing from 1000 to 1200 pounds, at prices ranging from $4.35 to $4.60 for 1000 to 1050 pound steers, and $4.70 to $4.85 for 1100 to 1200 pounders. The good steers, 800 to 900 pounds, are in demand at $3.90 to $4.12½, but they have to be good quality.

Milch Cows.

Trade moderate, with prices ranging from $30 to $55 each.

Veal Calves.

The receipts of calves were large, over 400. Prices ranged from $3 to $6 per cwt., the bulk selling from $4 to $5 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

E. J. Jaffaray of the North American Live Stock Company was on the market with 800 lambs and 115 yearlings, all of which were shorn. These sheep and lambs are all of superior quality and were reported as being sold at $8 per cwt. all round. They were consigned to Wesley Dunn. Spring lambs are worth from $1 to $7 each.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris reported prices unchanged at $6.40 for selects and $6.15 for lights and fats.

Sault Ste. Marie, April 25.—The pulp mill No. 1 of Sault Ste. Marie Pulp & Paper Co. was destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The fire originated about three a. m. in the screening-room from a hot journal, which ignited the oil. Instantly the mill was filled with smoke and the night men rushed out, leaving the machinery running, which rumbled on until the burning floors let the heavy dryers fall into the water raceway below.

Benjamin Schuratz, who went on the roof to assist the firemen, was struck by one of the streams, knocking him off on another roof, causing his death.

The ground wood machinery will be a total loss, but the walls have not been injured to any extent.

The loss is estimated at $150,000, with $100,000 insurance.

George Millington, superintendent of the company, stated that the earning power of the mill had increased during the past year, and the present month would have exceeded any previous Soo records. A new plant will be installed as speedily as possible.

Insurance Losses.

D. C. Edwards left last night for the Soo to adjust the losses. Local insurance men think that the estimate of the loss is exaggerated. They say that the insurance carried totalled about $70,000, about $50,000 being on machinery. The companies interested are: London & Lancashire, Western, Hartford, Phoenix of Brooklyn, Montreal, Canada, London Mutual, Merchants, Standard, Phoenix of Hartford, Manitoba, German-American, Connecticut, Queen City and several others.

The total loss incurred by any single concern will not exceed $12,000.

FOURTEEN LIVES LOST.

Steamer Arcadia Wrecked and All Hands Lost.

Manistee, Mich., April 25.—The steamer Arcadia, which left this port on the afternoon of April 12 for Two Rivers, was wrecked on the same night, and all hands on board were lost, but no suspicion existed until Tuesday that such was her fate.

Before starting Capt. May was warned of the approaching storm, which proved the worst in years, but he thought he could weather it. Although a small steamer she was short-handed, having but one pilot and one engineer.

William McMartin, of 691 Concord avenue, a personal friend of Captain Harry May, master and owner of the boat which has gone to the bottom with her entire crew, refused to leave port on the Arcadia because he declares her engines were in bad shape.

He is firm in his belief that the boat was entirely seaworthy in every respect, save for the condition of her engines, and that had they been in proper shape she would have ridden out almost any storm.

Three Young Women Killed.

Millville, N. J., April 25.—Three young women employed at a glass factory here were killed yesterday by the collapse of a smoke-stack, which crashed through a room in which they were working. The dead: Lena Doughty, Lydia Thurston, Sylvia Gallagher. The accident occurred during the brief 60-mile windstorm.

Described As Murderess.

New York, April 25.—Mrs. Anasia de Massey, who is on trial, charged with having shot and killed Gustav Simon, her one-time employer, yesterday heard herself described to a jury as a murderess.

After several witnesses had testified about the wounds which caused Simon's death, and the office in which the tragedy took place, Rea Fauchere, cashier of the Queen Shirtwaist Company, was called to the stand and identified Mrs. de Massey as a former employe of the company.

Very little evidence was heard, and an adjournment was taken till to-day.

Miners' Strike Settled.

Fernie, B. C., April 25.—Reports from most reliable sources give the assurance that the miners' strike has been settled.

It is known beyond doubt that an acceptable proposition was submitted by the miners to the operators, and although the official statement has not yet been given out, there is every reason to believe that the troubles are at an end.

Mackenzie King, when asked about the report, said that he hoped to give out an official statement to-day of a settlement.

Purely Accidental.

Montreal, April 25.—The coroners completed an enquiry yesterday into the death of three persons, two women and a man, in the Canada Steam Laundry fire last week, and found that the starting of the fire was purely accidental, and that blame could not be attached to anyone connected with the place.

Age does not make us childish, as some say. It finds us true children.—Goethe.

Action Was Not Justified.

Mr. Borden Voices Protest Of Ontario Against Land Grab.

Hon. Mr. Fielding Says Government Is Not Concerned What Becomes of Licenses—Dr. Sproule Calls It Robbery—Port Hope's Trouble—Discrimination Is Charged—More Estimates—$31,000,000 Voted.

Ottawa, April 25.—The House yesterday afternoon passed bills providing for the harbors at Montreal and Quebec.

In committee re the bill to increase the borrowing powers of the Quebec harbor commissioners, Mr. Fielding stated that the amount that had been advanced was $3,979,645, but in addition to that the arrears of interest up to June 30 last were $2,506,336, and some interest had accrued since then. It was now proposed to loan an additional $800,000 to enable the commissioners to carry on the works and to give the proposed bonds a priority.

Mr. Foster complained of lack of information regarding Quebec harbor. They ought to know how much had been expended by the Government, and how the $800,000 was to be expended. Mr. Fielding said that whatever scandals had occurred in connection with Quebec harbor had taken place under the last Government, and not under the present.

R. L. Borden did not object to the equipping of national harbors, but he would like to see promiscuous borrowing replaced by a definite policy. He thought that there should be some Government inspection of these works.

No Two-Cent Rate.

By agreement between Hon. Mr. Fielding and R. L. Borden, there was formally submitted to the House months ago, declaring "that it is expedient that the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada to enquire determine and report with the least possible delay whether or not the tolls charged in standard passenger tariffs should be reduced so as not to exceed two cents per mile upon all or any of the railways of Canada."

An amendment was at that time proposed by Mr. Emmerson declaring that, as the railway commission is already making such investigation, no action of the Government is necessary. Upon division, the amendment carried by a party vote—yeas, 36, nays 26.

Port Hope's Trouble.

Upon motion to go into supply Col. Ward (Durham) complained of the Government's discrimination against Port Hope, and in favor of Cobourg. The G. T. R. carry ferry from Charlotte, N. Y., is to come to Cobourg, instead of to Port Hope. The Government, said Mr. Ward, had spent large sums on the harbor and piers at Cobourg to bring this about. The obvious reason, he submitted, was to be found in the fact that electors of Durham rejected Hon. A. B. Aylesworth as a candidate for Parliament. The Ministry had threatened to give Port Hope on "object lesson," and Port Hope was certainly getting it.

Mr. Ward also touched on the terminus of the Trent Canal. The Government was giving Port Hope another "object lesson" as a punishment for defeating Mr. Aylesworth.

Fisher Defends.

Mr. Fisher defended the Government. There was, he declared, no political end to this matter. As a matter of business, the Cobourg harbor was more easily improved. Reports on file in the department showed this to be true.

Aylesworth Denies.

Mr. Aylesworth arose and denied that he had threatened to give Durham County an object lesson if that county defeated him for Parliament. He was proud of the large vote which he polled in 1904. He had carried his he polled in 1904. He had carried the Town of Port Hope by 124 majority. The discrimination by the Government against Port Hope did not result from any motives of spite on his part. As to the Port Hope terminus of the Trent Canal. Mr. Aylesworth denied that he had buncoed the constituency. He had published Sir Wilfrid Laurier's letters in good faith.

The Land Grab.

At the evening session of the House R. L. Borden voiced the protest of Ontario against the recent confiscation of 60,000 acres of land at Petawawa. The action of the Dominion Government, he said, was unjustifiable. If Sir Frederick Borden was right, then all the crown lands of Ontario could be appropriated without compensation.

Mr. Fielding replied that Quebec had offered the land free of charge to the Dominion Government, but the Ross Government, in Ontario, had asked the militia department to take this land in Ontario, which the province offered to lease for 99 years at a merely nominal rent.

Mr. R. L. Borden: "What was to become of the licensees?"

Mr. Fielding: "That was no concern of ours."

Mr. Fielding pleaded for a free hand for the militia department. Our army was small, but it must be made efficient. If Ontario was entitled to compensation, this Government would gladly settle. He charged that the Ontario Government was not acting in good faith.

Mr. Alcorn (P. E. Co.) defended the Whitney Government, and Dr. Sproule delivered a scathing arraignment of the Laurier Government.

"Why is it," he asked, "that in the Northwest, when lands are taken, the timber licensees are compensated, but when Ontario lands are taken they are robbed by the Government?"

More Estimates.

The House went into supply and passed a big batch of estimates, including $28,000,000 for the Transcontinental Railway. Thirty-one million dollars were voted in 68 minutes, the Opposition, apparently, being as anxious as the Government to get the estimates passed.

NATIONAL BOARD OF TRADE.

Should Have One With Office In Old London.

Ottawa, April 25.—At the meeting of the board of trade, the president, J. W. Woods, suggested that the Ottawa Board of Trade should become a national one, and one through which Dominion trade suggestions might emanate to the Government and mother country.

He suggested an office in the British capital, at which reliable information could be obtained regarding Canada and her affairs. He claimed that the laws of Quebec were more generous than those of Ontario to businesses.

STRANGLED HIMSELF.

Berlin Tanner Ends His Life After His Arrest.

Berlin, April 25.—Michael Schaefer, tanner, about 61 years of age, who had been arrested by Chief O'Neill Tuesday evening for brutally assaulting his wife and family, while intoxicated, committed suicide shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday morning by strangling himself with the aid of his necktie. He was found about 3.30 o'clock by Constable Gerbigan lifeless. An inquest will be held.

Must Face a Jury.

Orangeville, April 25.—Walter Jackson, charged with being implicated in the death of his sister-in-law, Lizzie Wells, last summer, was brought before Judge McCarthy, who considered it a case for investigation before a jury, and declined to allow Jackson to re-elect to be tried before him. The case will therefore be heard before Chief Justice Falconbridge at the Assizes on the 13th of May next. Frank E. Hodgins, K. C., will represent the crown and James Walter Curry, K. C., with C. R McKeown, will have charge of the defence.

Arthur C. Douglass, the druggist who is accused in connection with the affair, will receive his preliminary hearing on May 20, and his case will likely be disposed of at the quarter sessions, which begin on June 11.

Jackson was readmitted to bail in the sum of $4,000.

Charge Failed.

Chatham, April 25.—At the spring assizes of the county court of justice here yesterday, Richard Bartram, aged 24, married, of St. Thomas, was acquitted of a charge preferred against him by Mrs. Edward McLean, of Tilbury.

Bartram testified that he did not even leave his engine on the night in question.

Lived 150 Years.

New York, April 25.—A despatch from Santiago de Cuba says: Antonio Infante, a negro, is dead, at the age of 150 years.

Despite his great age, the greatest recorded in modern times, he retained all his faculties unimpaired to the end.

Notorious Brigand Captured.

Warsaw, April 25.—A notorious brigand, Stan Lilaus Lia, the author of many crimes, has been captured at Lublin, ninety-five miles from here, mortally wounded, after the house in which he had sought refuge had been blown to pieces by artillery fire.

There always seems to be a fly of some kind in every ointment. Just as the citizens of Toronto, including the Mayor and aldermen, have finished turning joyous handsprings and giving gold medals and educative grants to Tom Longboat, who won a 25 mile race the other day, a correspondent of the Telegram butts in with the following awkward letter, which is apt to make one think that, perhaps, people are a little too ready to "slop over" in sporting matters and look on life-risking heroism as a matter of course:

"Sir,—I see in your widely read paper that the Mayor and Council of the city of Toronto are going to give Tom Longboat $500 and its influence to secure to him a University education. The people of Toronto accord the said T. Longboat a public ovation, the hero (save the mark) seated in an auto. All for what? Winning a running match. Well and good. It is within the province of the Mayor, the Council and the people of Toronto to please themselves in this matter.

"But I do not see any notice or account of any reception having been given or about or proposed to be given to the gallant ex-soldier of the 12th Lancers, who risked his life in the late train smash, in endeavoring to save the lives of several of his fellow-creatures.

"Let me ask you, sir, which is the more reasonable cause for civic recognition, genuine British pluck or fleetness of foot?

"Do the people here—who affect to and perhaps do—despise the soldier and sailor, recognize that they owe all and everything to these two classes? That without these two classes the British Empire and Canada, of which they are, and justly so, proud, would be non-existent. And do they see that in the near future it will not be runners they will want. They will get plenty of them, but the men with the pluck of the true hero of the railway disaster will be the class on which the life of Canada itself will depend.

It will be welcome news that active operations looking to the rebuilding of Hotel Quinte are to be commenced immediately. Contracts for the woodwork and masonry have been let to Messrs. The new hotel will be a four-storey building and will be far more ornate than the old Quinte, so far as the interior is concerned. Mr. Jenkins is very anxious to have the hotel ready for reopening by the 1st day of August next, but the intervening time seems rather short. The contracts already let fix October 15 as the time limit for the completion of the work. One thing is sure, however—the Quinte cannot go into commission again any too quickly.

SPLIT, BRITTLE, DULL HAIR.

All Come From Dandruff, Which is Caused by a Germ.

Split hair, hard hair, lusterless hair, brittle hair, falling hair, all owe their origin to dandruff, which is caused by a measly little microbe that burrows into the scalp, throwing up the cuticle into dandruff scales and sapping the vitality of the hair at the root, causing the several diseased conditions of the hair till it finally falls out. Modern science has discovered a remedy to destroy the dandruff microbe, which is combined in Newbro's Herpicide, the delightful hair dressing. Allays itching instantly and makes hair soft as silk. A High Building.

There is now under construction in New York a building, expected to be ready for occupancy next May, which will be the highest in the world. From the sidewalk to the top of the lantern on the tower will be a distance of 612 feet and 3 inches, and above this will rise a 40-foot flagpole, the ball of which will be 652 feet above the sidewalk, or within a few feet of an eighth of a mile. From the bottom of the foundations to the sidewalk will be a distance of 92 feet, so that the highest office building in Montreal might be dropped into the hole and but little more than a storey would show above the sidewalk level. The area of the lot on which the building stands is 29,163 feet, or not quite half an acre, while the total floor area of the building will be 411,833 square feet, or almost 9 1-2 acres, illustrating the immense economy of space possible through the erection of high buildings. Of course structures of this height, 40 storeys, would be impossible were it not for high speed elevators. Two kinds will be installed in this building. One will carry passengers to the 41st floor from the sidewalk level in one minute, and the others, which are to be, of the express type, will rise 30 storeys in 30 seconds without a stop. There will be no danger from fire, for not a cubic inch of wood will be utilized in either the construction or finish. The only thing to burn will be the contents of the offices. A fire would, therefore, be confined to the room in which it originated. Whatever may be said for or against the high building, it is certainly to its credit that it has been responsible for the perfection of fireproofing. In half a century from now the devastation by fire of the commercial centre of a large city on this continent should be an impossibility.

Canada's Inland Waterways.

With the rapid increase of recent years in the grain crops of Western Canada, it is fully realized that, in addition to more adequate railway transport, the Dominion must also improve its facilities for navigation through the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence canal system, so that the wheat yield of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta may find its natural outlet at Canadian rather than United States ports on the Atlantic seaboard. Twenty-eight boards of trade, voicing the sentiment of business men from Sydney to Vancouver, have joined in a request that the Dominion Government should widen and deepen the Welland Canal to twenty feet and have been given to understand that this will be done as soon as the money required for the purpose is available. When this link between Lake Ontario and Lake Erie was enlarged thirty years ago it was thought that its capacity would be equal to all the requirements of the future, but for years past it has been apparent that if Montreal, the natural entrepot of this trade, is to hold its own against Buffalo and other U.S. ports, not only the Welland, but the whole St. Lawrence canal system must be considerably enlarged. The enormous expenditure already made on the Great Lakes canal system will be in vain unless these channels of commerce are kept abreast of the growing requirements of Canada's commercial progress. The Minister of Railways and Canals has announced his intention of pushing to an early completion what is known as the Trent waterway, from Trenton on the Bay of Quinte across the Province of Ontario by a chain of lakes and streams to the mouth of the Severn River on Georgian Bay, and a large enough appropriation will be taken at the present session to permit of the vigorous prosecution of this work. A comprehensive report is now in course of preparation to determine the practicability and the probable cost for an even more important addition to the interior waterways of the Dominion, the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Ship Canal, through which, if it is built, large vessels will be able to voyage from the western extremity of Lake Superior to Montreal, continuing thence, if they wish, without breaking bulk, to the ports of Great Britain.

A Government Blunder.

Mr. J. E. Armstrong, of East Lambton, who has taken a great interest in the European markets for Canadian farm products, has brought once more to the attention of the House the fact that Germany is getting the advantage in Canada, of the British preference. Germany has practically shut Canadian goods out of her market because the British preference was not also given to Germany. The result is that while Germany buys of farm products $48,000,000 worth from the Argentine Republic, $28,000,000 from Australia and immensely larger quantities from the United States, Canada sends thither only $1,000,000 worth, and is gradually losing that trade. At the same time the Canadian agent at Leeds reports to the Government that immense quantities of German manufactures are sent free into Great Britain, where they are repacked and shipped to Canada as British goods receiving preferential treatment. The preference duty is just one-half the sur-tax rate, so that Germany is regularly shipping goods to Canada under the most favored terms, while Germany imposes prohibitory duties on Canadian grain, fruit, meat products, and other standard products. Mr. Armstrong insists that this condition should not be allowed to exist a moment longer, and shows by conclusive evidence that the Government policy and administration is allowing this country to be injured as to its exports and swindled as to its imports by its blundering over commercial relations with Germany.

SPORTING NOTE.

The batters who got married during the winter have not commenced to hit the ball yet. Stone, who led the American League last year, is only hitting at the rate of .214. Last year at this time he was clouting the ball about .300, but he was single then Lajoie was married during the winter, and his mark so far is .167. Terry Turner is another who has taken to himself a wife, and while last year he was among the top-notchers, he is now only .182. It may not be the worries of married life that is doing it, but there are the facts, figure it out.

The Bilean Way To Health.

Stomach and liver complaints and their symptoms — headache, indigestion, constipation, piles, blood impurities, etc. — cannot be cured by taking drugs which "overdrive" these organs. Yet that is what mere purgatives do! Bileans, on the contrary, help the organs to fulfil their functions. Bileans are composed of pure herbal extracts specially prepared in accordance with a valuable and unvarying formula, which is the sole property of the Bilean Co. They possess a perfectly natural action, and do not cause discomfort, but gently stimulate and regulate all the functions of stomach, liver and bowels. A splendid spring blood purifier! All stores and druggists at 50c or from Bilean Co., Toronto, for price.

Ghost Frightens Newly-Wed Couple

Philadelphia, Pa., April 24.—Mysterious manifestations in a pretty little villa near Wissahickon Drive, in Chestnut Hill, have nearly driven a young bride insane. She is now a nervous wreck and nothing could induce her to return to the house from which she and her husband fled early yesterday morning.

The house is a two storey stucco villa in Hillcrest avenue and is surrounded by one and a half acres of ground. To it last Friday went Mr. and Mrs. William Cabre, newly-married. The place suited them, and with bright plans for the future they started housekeeping.

All went well until night. The couple were sleeping quietly, when Mrs. Cabre was awakened by a peculiar noise. Looking toward the window, she was horrified to see the face of a woman staring in at her. With a cry she woke her husband.

The man saw the same face and, leaping out of bed, rushed to the basement. As he approached the ghostly visitor shook her head, closed her eyes and vanished. Astonished and puzzled, Mr. Cabre turned to his wife who was weeping and almost in hysterics. They could arrive at no solution of the affair, but determined to await further developments.

Nothing out of the ordinary occurred on Saturday until the couple retired. There is no gas in the house and as Mr. Cabre placed a lighted lamp on the bureau the latter rocked like a ship at sea, and the light was suddenly extinguished as if blown out by a breath from invisible lips. Then, as the frightened bride caught her husband's arm in terror, came the same peculiar noise and at the window appeared the same ghostly face.

Thoroughly shaken by her strange experience, Mrs. Cabre vowed she would never spend another night in the house. Mr. and Mrs. Cabre spent yesterday with George Johnson, a neighbor.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Glee Club to-night at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Clarke has contributed a number of photos of different members for the photo case in the reading room.

A large and enthusiastic representation was present last night to draft the football schedule and elect officers. Over 60 players were represented.

Senior members should call early and secure gratis one of the new celluloid cases for their membership certificates.

Mr. R. J. Colville, of Toronto, is to address the students of Albert College on Sunday morning, and in the afternoon speak at the men's meeting at the Y.M.C.A.

When a girl objects to being kissed it's a sure sign that the wrong fellow is trying to break into the game.

It would seem to be in accord with the eternal fitness of things when a patient man weds a trained nurse.

Due and Timely Warning

Our country correspondents says an exchange, are requested to write briefly and to the point in preparing their accounts of quiet weddings; they may however consider themselves at perfect liberty to spread themselves in giving details of any uproarous weddings that may occur to break the monotony in their respective neighborhoods. We further wish them to remember that a groom attired in the conventional black is sufficiently covered without any description of his dress, but a groom married in tar and feathers is worthy of special rates and a full column with headlines. If the happy couple then depart they should be permitted to go without saying, but should they begin to pull hair before the minister has got out of hearing, we want all the particulars. If the table groans, let it groan; but if any of the guests choke to death on the 'collation' it will be a serious matter with our special correspondents if we don't get complete and early returns. What we want is news that is news.

Carnegie Beggars

ABOUT A MILLION DOLLARS DOLED OUT TO MUNICIPAL MENDICANTS IN ONTARIO — A HUMILIATING SPECTACLE.

(Hamilton Herald.)

The report for the year 1906 of the provincial inspector of public libraries is an interesting document. It contains photographic views of some two dozen public library buildings, almost all of them recently erected, and all handsome and substantial structures.

We confess to a feeling of humiliation in glancing through his report and finding that in all but one or two cases these public buildings have been erected through the bounty of an alien — Andrew Carnegie. It speaks little for the public spirit of the citizens of so many Ontario towns that they neglected to establish free public libraries until they could make use of the money of a stranger for that purpose.

How much money Mr. Carnegie has spent in providing public library buildings for Ontario people is not mentioned in the report; but the sum must be very close to a million dollars — perhaps it exceeds the million. Here is the list of Carnegie libraries of which detailed descriptions are supplied in the annual report, together with the sums contributed by Mr. Carnegie to erect the buildings (the whole cost of erection of each case having been defrayed by him);

Toronto	$275,000
Ottawa	100,000
Brantford	35,00
Windsor	27,000
St. Thomas	27,000
St. Catharines	25,000
Berlin	24,500
Guelph	24,000
Galt	23,000
Sarnia	20,000
Chatham	19,000
Brockville	17,000
Stratford	15,000
Collingwood	14,500
Lindsay	13,500
Smith's Falls	11,000
Waterloo	10,000
St. Mary's	10,000
Goderich	10,000
Cornwall	7,000
Total	$707,500

In addition to these twenty cities and towns, numerous other smaller places have received library aid from Mr. Carnegie. How many, the report does not say, but it mentions the following places as having benefited by his bounty last year: Dresden, $8,000; Milton, $5,000; Perth, $10,000; Picton, $12,000; Bracebridge, $10,000; Gravenhurst, $7,000; Oshawa, $12,000; Wallaceburg, $11,500; Kincardine, $5,000; Kemptville, $3,000; Hanover, $10,000; Orangeville (additional) $2,500; in all, $88,000 for the year 1906 alone.

Of all the considerable towns in this province Hamilton and London alone appear to have neglected to extend a begging palm to the dispenser of libraries. London is evidently proud of being out of the list of Carnegie beneficiaries, for a pregnant sentence in the report from the London library is "Have had no gift from Mr. Carnegie." But let not London or Hamilton boast too much of its independence. Let us be honest. The Hamilton public library was opened in 1890 and the London library five years later—long before Mr. Carnegie began to put some of his surplus millions into library buildings. Maybe if Hamilton and London had not been in advance of most other Ontario towns they too would have gone a-begging to the little ironmaster. And maybe they will yet do so; so we had better not crow.

Altogether there are in Ontario 2188 public libraries, of which 230 are free.

London's Smoke.

London's smoke travels far. A correspondent of the Times tells of seeing the country air filled with soot sixty-four miles away from the metropolis. He asked a shepherd where it came from. The answer was: "We call it London dirt. In the winter when it comes up the snow here is covered with black."

An Odd Will.

In the will of Isaiah Thomas of Worcester, Mass., drawn up in 1830, he gave to the town certain tracts of land, but stipulated that the town would have to buy drinks for the poor people of Worcester every Thanksgiving day. This stipulation, however, was omitted in a codicil.

TIMELY TOPICS.

WHO? A GARDEN IDYLL.

(Detroit Free Press.)

Who wants a garden full of flowers,
And who will worry dad;
Who'll coax and wheedle him for hours,
And who will make him mad?
Who'll urge him now to till the ground,
To sprinkle morning glories round,
And who to make him dig, is bound?—
Mother.

Who'll tackle him both night and day,
For packages of seeds;
Who'll send him swearing on his way,
To borrow tools he needs?
And who'll give not a moment's rest
Unto the one she loves the best,
And whom will dad declare a pest?
Mother.

Yes, who is it from now till May
Will worry poor old dad,
And tell in aggravating way
Of gardens she has had?
And who at last the spade will take
The trowel and the borrowed rake,

Those who thus give sanction to what many deem an evil, especially for children and youths, will hardly shrink from accepting responsibility for this growth, whether it be good or bad.

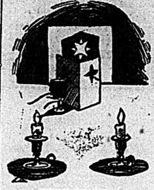
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

COLORED STARS.

How to Perform a Pretty Experiment With Cardboard and Candles.

Here is a pretty experiment that any ingenious boy can make. Get a piece of cardboard, say, 8 by 12 inches in size and bend it gently in the middle. In one of the wings thus formed cut a four pointed star, with two of the points vertical and two horizontal. Now bend this wing back upon the other and make a tracing of the star on the latter with a pencil.

Your object is to get the exact center of the star tracing, and this you may do by making a dot at the intersection of the diagonals. Now make another drawing of a star on the uncut wing, but its points must be at an angle of forty-five degrees with the first. Cut this new star out carefully and place the cardboard, as shown in the illustration, on a table bearing two lighted candles of the same height and opposite to a screen of white paper fixed to the wall.



CANDLES IN POSITION.

Regulate the angle formed by the two wings so that the luminous images cast by the stars may fall, one directly on the other, in the center of the screen. You will thus have a bright star with eight points. Now, if you cover one of the two openings with a piece of colored glass, say green, you will have a tricolored star, with the points alternately red and green and the center white.

The piece of colored glass may be replaced by a wineglass containing any colored liquid, and the points of the star will then show alternately the color of the liquid and its complimentary hue. Some very pretty effects may thus be produced.

SAP OF THE SUGAR MAPLE.

How the Sweet Liquid Is Stored In the Tree—Warmth Makes It Flow.

There is much difference of opinion as to where the sap in a sugar tree comes from. It does not come from the ground by the roots, but is in the tree and has been all winter in the form of starch deposited in the cells of the soft wood under the bark. When the weather becomes warm enough in the spring to set in action the vital processes of the tree, this starch is changed into sugar and the cells become so full of the sweet sap as to exert a great pressure on them. The warmth of the spring sun starts this vital action, and the sap circulates through the cells on the way to the buds, which soon swell out and burst into leaf. When the tree is tapped by the sugar maker, the pressure of the sap on the cells forces it out of the opening made. There is no special current up from the roots or down to them; the tree is simply filled with sap all through the soft wood and mostly at that part of it immediately under the bark. Here new wood is formed of the matter held in solution in the sap.

The sap will flow while the ground is still frozen, for it is warmth in the air that causes the flow and not the action of the roots in the soil. Therefore it is quite useless, as some people do, to spread any little or other nonconducting matter under the tree for the purpose of keeping the ground frozen to delay the budding. If this effect be desired, the whole tree must be covered in and kept in a dormant condition by a low temperature all over.—Chicago News.

A Princess of Six.

For a night, for a day,
In a land far away,
Ruled a sweet little princess of six;

That can never be hid—
She mixed mustard with sugar and spice.
When her subjects so gay
Came to dine on that day
They made faces that weren't very nice.

Then she went out to walk
With a doll that could talk,
And the doll talked so loud and so long
That the sweet little maid
Said, "I'm very much 'fraid
There is something inside you that's wrong."

Then she pulled pussy's tail,
And poor puss gave a wail
And scratched her a scratchety scratch.
If you don't believe me
You can go there and see
Through the little red door with the latch

Money a man has spent seldom worries him unless it was spent for something that interferes with his digestive apparatus.—Chicago News.

If a man has a testy temper it is folly to put it to the test.

BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1906) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

"was the woman mad who tricked you at Fontenoy, who has tricked and befooled you at every turn since you came back? I have betrayed your country, your King, your army, yourself, and yet you, a noble hating treason, loving France, hesitate to arrest the traitress whom you have sworn to bring to justice. It is you who are mad, my friend, not I; or shall I say," she had dropped her eyes and curtsied, "Monseigneur is too good?"

"Yvonne!" the exclamation burst from his lips. He was leaning heavily on a chair and peering dazed into her eyes.

"Yvonne, of course, Yvonne of the Spotless Ankles," she lifted her dress a few inches, "Yvonne whom at the bidding of another woman you were to make your tool. Did you? I think not, for the Vicomte de Nerac can be more easily tricked by women into doing what they please than the most unscrupulous libertine in France. But you must take your revenge on Yvonne now."

Yvonne! Andre's brain reeled. Yvonne, who had saved his life, was a traitress, the traitress whose crimes merited condign punishment, whom now, by the devilish device of fate, he must arrest and send to a felon's death to save himself and Denise.

He seized her arm. "Who and what are you?" he cried, beside himself, for the torture of the fascinating riddle racked him beyond endurance.

"That," she replied with her slow smile, "is my secret and it will perish with me. Do your duty, Vicomte, and return to Versailles. Madame de Pompadour awaits you; the blood of the noblesse, her foes, will atone in her eyes. She has triumphed, and so have you. Go back to your King, take him the proof of his royal intrigues, destroy the noble traitors who would have destroyed you. Love and revenge; the sweetest things the world can give a man, are yours. Are they not enough?" She was coolly taunting him, and out there in the court-yard waited the police ready to arrest a traitress with the proof of her crime on her person. Was ever a man in so cruel and tragic a position?

"Why do you waver?" she asked very quietly. "Is it because of Denise?"

He met her gaze. This was not the crystal-gazer, nor the "Princess," nor even Yvonne who spoke. It was another woman, from whom all that was hateful, cynical, insolent, had vanished. Andre's hands on his chair trembled.

"Yes," he answered, in a low voice, "were it not for Denise and Denise's sake alone I would destroy these papers and would take you past the Barriers myself. You saved my life once, more than once, for you could have killed me in the cabin at Fontenoy; you and the Chevalier—God rest his soul—enabled me to save the honor of Denise—Denise." He paused for emotion. "You have enabled me to save my own honor. Why you did these things I do not know. But I would to-night, and now, take you past the Barrier of St. Louis, and I would then bid Versailles and you adieu for ever. God alone can judge you, not I—but Denise—there is Denise——"

"Then Denise herself must decide."

She was mad after all; stark mad. He stood helplessly picking at the embroidered upholstery of the chair. Mad, mad; they were all mad.

The woman had glided towards the door on the right. Andre looked up exultingly. Ha! She was gone—fled. Then he, too, must escape at once. He gathered up the papers, seized his cloak, and darted towards the window, only to start back with a cry.

On the threshold of the doorway stood Denise.

He stood spellbound. Yes, it was Denise.

CHAPTER XXX.

She came forward with outstretched hands. "Andre," she asked with passionate eagerness, "you are safe?"

He took her to his breast, looking into her eyes. "Sweetheart," he whispered, "why are you here?"

"Because you sent for me," she began innocently.

"Sent for you?" he repeated, in dull bewilderment. "Mad," he muttered, "mad, mad." His brain was beginning to break down.

"Yes," she whispered, for his face frightened her, "you sent for me. See: read."

Andre took the strip of paper from her. After a few minutes he was able to spell out these words:

"I am in great danger. You alone can save me. Come at once to Paris. Carrefour de St. Antoine No. 3. Andre."

The paper dropped. The writing was his, at least it appeared to be. Could he have written it? He searched his whirling thoughts, recalling the events of this awful night following on the King's illness, the strain of waiting in Madame de Pompadour's room after the scene at the inn, the discovery of Denise, the interviews that followed, the finding of the Chevalier and Mont Rouge, the gallop to Paris, and then all that had happened in this salon. He snatched at the paper again; he had not written it; no, it was a clever forgery, the work of the only woman who could do it—"No. 101."

Denise was watching him in terror, for his lips moved, yet he said nothing.

"A girl called Yvonne," she whispered, "brought it to me at midnight; she conducted me to this house, and I have been waiting here ever since, waiting for you. Yvonne has disappeared and the doors were all locked. There is only the woman who——"

They both turned sharply at the rustle of a dress and stood hand in hand gazing in silence, for there had entered the girl whom Andre had seen plotting with Onslow at "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold."

Andre mechanically whipped off his hat, Denise mechanically answered the curtsey of the lady who had entered, for this was a gentlewoman of their own rank, whose beauty would have adorned the great hall in the Chateau de Beau Sejour.

"We agreed," she began quietly, "that Mademoiselle la Marquise was to decide. Monsieur le Vicomte, what I have to say is for the ears of Mademoiselle alone. Permit me to show you where you can wait. I shall not keep you long." She pointed with her fan to the door and then held out her fingers.

Andre walked out of the room like one in a dream. The door closed. The two women were alone.

"I can be brief," the stranger said quietly. "You have heard of 'No. 101'; you know of the stealing of the secret despatch. I am the thief. I am 'No. 101.'"

Denise recoiled with a cry of horror, her eyes fixed on the girl's face with an expression of indignant stupefaction.

"The Vicomte de Nerac," the stranger proceeded, "knows what you know now, and he will return to Versailles a hero," she paused, "if he will arrest me. He has the despatch; he has a letter which will convict the Comte de Mont Rouge, who, Mademoiselle, by loaded dice, sent you to be the thief of the Court. The Vicomte has been seen to come here; it has also been discovered that I am in this house, and unless he returns to Versailles with that despatch he will be ruined and Madame de Pompadour will also send you to the Bastile, for she has proof that you were in her room this night. The Vicomte is in great danger, and you were summoned here to save him, for at your bidding alone will he do his duty and arrest the traitress—myself."

Denise's indignation had already begun to melt. She freed the necklace at her throat as if it were choking her.

"Shall I now ask the Vicomte to return?" The girl moved towards the door.

"Wait—one moment! You are"—Denise broke off in agitation—"you are Yvonne?" she whispered.

The stranger sat down and unconcernedly began to tear up one of the sheets of paper littering the floor. "I am," she answered quietly.

"And you gave the Vicomte de Nerac the secret despatch which you stole?"

"He took it from the English agent to whom I had given it."

"Ah!" Again Denise had guessed the truth. "You once saved the Vicomte life?" she went on.

"I helped to do so."

"Yet you are a traitress?"

"Yes, I am a traitress, and a traitress I should have continued to be if you and the Vicomte de Nerac had not stepped in to prevent me."

The emotionless voice in which this confession was made had ceased to startle Denise, for she was scanning the girl's face intently.

"Ah!" she cried with sudden conviction, "the Chevalier de St. Amant is your brother!"

The other looked up quickly. "Was my brother," she corrected gently. "The Chevalier de St. Amant is dead."

"Merciful God!" Denise was leaning against a chair, faint and white.

"He was killed at the inn by the English agent, from whom in this room the Vicomte de Nerac took the secret despatch." Denise had covered her face with her hands. "And you are right, Mademoiselle; the Chevalier was my brother, who helped me till to-night to be the traitress that I am."

"Silence," Denise cried in anguish. "Oh, for God's sake be silent!"

Denise walked to and fro, wrung by a torture unendurable to a woman's soul.

Suddenly she paused. "Do you know," she demanded, "that your brother save the Vicomte de Nerac when he might have ruined him?"

"I know more than that. Yes, Mademoiselle, I know that what he did was done because he loved you. That also is the truth."

Denise caught at her arms. The question in her gesture and her eyes needed no words. The girl rose and faced her.

"When we parted at the foot of Madame de Pompadour's stairs his last words were, 'Unless Denise or the Vicomte gets the paper Denise is ruined.' The paper was in my possession and my brother went back to the inn to explain to the English agent why he could not have it."

"But why did you not give me the paper at Versailles—you came to me as Yvonne—you——"

"If I had given you the paper at Versailles should I have been here now? I loved my life a little then—I did not know my brother's fate."

And Denise had no answer but a shiver of mute assent.

"You have forgotten my brother, who was to come here to meet me that we might fly together; you have also forgotten the Vicomte, to whom that despatch was a necessity, and you have forgotten yourself, Mademoiselle. Could my brother, who loved you, have wished that you should at Versailles have been proved to have stolen what you had tried to steal? You have forgotten Madame de Pompadour. Would she or the King have believed your story that a peasant girl had given you the despatch?" She paused for a moment. "Would the Vicomte have believed it?"

"Andre?" Denise cried passionately. "How dare you?"

"There was only one way," the girl continued, quietly ignoring that cry of love's conviction, "to save you from the trap into which your enemies had lured you, and that was to bring the Vicomte and yourself here. My brother would have wished it, and I am glad that I tried and succeeded."

She turned away; her voice showed that the wonderful strength of will which had sustained her was giving way at last.

"You did it," Denise said after a long silence, "not for my sake, not wholly for your brother's, but—because you love Andre."

The girl, who had sunk on to the sofa, presently rose and crossed the room, and Denise, watching her as only one woman can watch another, shrank at the sight of that noble and pathetic beauty.

"Yes," was the unfaltering answer," I did it because I love Andre, because I alone can save him. Ah! it is not you, but I—I, who have saved him."

Denise gazed at her in silent helplessness. Fate was too strong for them all. The clock chimed out five strokes into the awful quiet of the room, and as Denise, in her restless misery, walked past the fireplace with its sculptured marble chimney-piece, she halted with a sharp-drawn breath. The crest on the clock had caught her eye, for the motto on it was "Dieu Le Vengeur!"

"Before we part," she cried, "you will tell me, you must, who you are—no," she added, in a stricken voice, "it is not necessary. I know, I know. Ah, God! this is terrible. 'Dieu Le Vengeur!'"

A quiet hand was laid on her shoulder. "Denise."

For some moments they looked at each other in breathless silence.

"It is true; yes, it is true, and you—you have guessed because you are a woman who loves. Ah! when your ancestors were as nothing mine were the nobles who made kings, who were leading the armies of France. I am a traitress, but to what?" her voice rang out. "To the man called Louis the Fifteenth, a craven, a bigot, a liar, a libertine, the victim of the priests and his lusts. That man is not France, not your France and mine. Listen. What would you have done if the King—the King," her scorn was immeasurable, "had stolen your mother, deserted her, sent your father to the scaffold for treason that he never committed? If you, the only daughter, had been saved from infamy and beggary by two faithful servants and brought up in secret to know that you name was corrupted, your brother a starveling in exile, your lands given to another? To that King I bear no allegiance and will bear none, so help me God, God who can avenge."

"Then——"

"Do not say that name. It is blotted out, but it is mine. Fifteen years ago, a child, I swore, and every year since I have sworn it on the grave that is called mine, that I would have revenge."

Denise answered with pale lips, "Yes, revenge."

"My brother and I planned and plotted revenge and we succeeded. The Court and the King can judge of that. Beauty was mine and I nourished it for revenge, I used it for revenge, but I have never forgotten, never, that I am a daughter of the noblesse, a woman as proud of my womanhood as you, Denise."

"Thank God," she murmured gently.

"To the world I was simply a number, to myself a sexless tool, living for one object alone, until you came into my brother's life, and then, ah, then, I dreamed of the day when my brother should win through you what is his by right—should be Marquis de Beau Sejour. But——"

Denise took her hand.

"If that were only all." She paused for a moment, overcome. "In London Andre came into my life. Till that fatal day I have inspired many men with the passion they call love. I thought I alone of women knew not what love could be, but another dream came to haunt me. It could not be. You did not love Francois. Andre did not love me. Some day he will tell you the story; the truth he must never know."

"And your brother——"

"Yes, he worked for you as best he could and I for Andre. Remember what we were and how we were placed. But we have succeeded—love brought us through. We remembered our Beau Sejour, and you whom he loved, he whom I loved, will share it between you. I thank God for that. My mother," the girl went on, "was a De Nerac, a cousin of Andre's mother. Had justice been done fifteen years ago Andre's father should have had my forfeited lands. But love will do what justice could not—your love and mine."

"Andre can restore you your name, your honor. He shall, he must."

"It is impossible. You cannot change the King. He would not, could not, undo the past—his past. My brother is dead, my family will die with me as will my secret. Fate is too strong for you, for me, for France. With Francois I worked to destroy the woman who now rules at Versailles and will continue to rule. And Andre from love for you strove to defeat us. Madame de Pompadour has triumphed over the Court, the noblesse, the Church, my brother, and you. Remember the past and to-night. Remember you can only ruin that woman by ruining yourself, by ruining Andre, and you will not save me. I see it all now. It is the destiny of France, and against the destiny of God's will we must fight in vain."

Denise had clasped her hands like one listening to the sentence of a supreme power. Were they not all caught alike in the web of a mysterious and inscrutable force, mere puppets as it seemed in a stupendous drama whose beginning and whose end were beyond all human insight and control, but puppets also of flesh and blood, whose passions and whose spirit, whose ambitions and whose ideals, whose souls and bodies so strong and so weak, gave to the drama the immortal breath of life? If—ah, if—Denise wrung her hands again. How few are there of those born of women from whom has not been wrung that bitter cry of revolt against the "if" of fate—if only they had been taught that out of the past comes the present and out of the present will come the future, and that they, the puppets, must make, every hour, their own lives and the lives of all others.

"You cannot save your France and mine," the girl was saying. "She is doomed, doomed. The writing is on the walls. Ruin is coming on kings and nobles and the people. In ten, twenty, perhaps fifty years there will be a new France, for the greatness of my people and yours no power can crush. Voices are crying out in the streets of Paris to-day, but France will not listen. She is drunk, mad, diseased, corrupt. Yet I know it, it has been revealed to me that there is a glorious future for our country, and see to it that the sons of what to-day is called Beau Sejour shall be in the hour of that rebirth on the side of the new France."

She moved quietly to the door, opened it, and called softly, "Mademoiselle has decided. Come."

As Andre entered he gazed from one to the other with the calmness of a great fear. What had he come to be told? He saw Denise's mind was made up, and he knew he must obey.

"Andre," she said, with dignified composure, "you will please bring the chief of police from the court-yard to this room."

For an instant he wavered, then controlling his emotion he left the room. When he returned with the chief of police one woman, hooded and cloaked, alone was there.

Denise threw back the girl's cloak which she had slipped on. The police agent started with intense surprise.

"You recognize me, Monsieur," Denise said freezingly. "Yes, it is the Marquise de Beau Sejour, and one of the maids of honor to her Majesty, who is not accustomed to be shadowed when she visits a house that belongs to herself, as this does."

"I offer my apologies to Mademoiselle la Marquise," the man stammered, "but I thought—I felt sure——"

"What you chose to think," Denise pursued, "can be no excuse for so insulting a mistake. The Marquise de Beau Sejour will, however, overlook it for once, provided that you promise not to repeat the offence. That will do."

She turned her back on his fervent avowals and the man crept from her haughty presence. In five minutes the court-yard was clear of Madame de Pompadour's spies.

Denise had fetched the stranger back. "Andre," she said, "be so good as to conduct this lady yourself to the barriers. I will wait for you here."

The girl quietly put on her cloak. "Adieu, Mademoiselle!" They clasped hands in silence. "Adieu—Denise," she whispered. "Adieu for ever!" Without another word Andre and she left the room.

When he returned an hour later one glance at his face told Denise that, whatever had passed in the journey, he did not know the secret of "No. 101." That was still to remain in the keeping of two women who loved the same man, and it would go with those two to the grave a secret for ever.

CHAPTER XXXI.

"Monsieur le Vicomte De Nerac waits on Madame la Marquise," said the gentleman-usher.

Madame de Pompadour glanced at the clock. As Andre bowed it began to strike ten distinctly.

"You are punctual, Vicomte, and a man of your word," the lady said with a faint smile.

Andre bowed again. What a contrast! The salon was as gay and refined as it had been a week ago. All traces of disorder had vanished and Madame herself in her heliotrope silk was as divinely seductive, as fresh and unconquerable, as when she had captivated Paris and the King at the ball of the Hotel-de-Ville. And against that vision of loveliness he saw reflected in the mirror his own grim face, with the haggard eyes and deep-cut lines round mouth and chin of a man who had "been in hell" since he last stood in this room.

"You are tired," Madame said gently, "if you please—" she wheeled a chair forward. But Andre remained standing. "I have to ask your pardon," she continued, dropping her eyes. "I am sorry that last night I used words which I deeply regret using. But though I cannot ask you, Vicomte, to forget them, I can and do ask you to forgive."

Andre's hand tightened unconsciously on the back of the chair. He was here to demand an apology, and he had been swiftly disarmed by one gentle stroke.

"This is the jewel of the Marquise de Beau Sejour," Madame said, "it is useless to me. I return it to you, unless you prefer I should return it to the Marquise herself in your presence and repeat what I have tried to say to you."

Andre took the jewel mechanically. An apology also to Denise! That, too, he had come to extort, and it was his and hers without the asking.

"You have served me," she added, "as no man has ever done or ever will. I was ungrateful and false and cruel and unjust. Let me alone now." She had held out a hand.

A third time Andre felt that he did not know Madame de Pompadour; he was learning as some men can that the heart and thoughts of a woman of genius, born to conquer a king and subjugate a court, are not to be fathomed in a few weeks, even by one to whom many other women have laid bare the mysterious workings of a woman's heart.

"I have brought you your despatch, Madame," he said, choosing his words slowly, and conscious of his clumsiness before the ease and tact of this bourgeoise adventuress.

"Yes," she took it almost indifferently, but the flash that turned her eyes from grey to blue, the quick movement of the locket on her breast, would have revealed much to another woman. She placed it on the table beside a tiny heap of torn papers. Andre recognized these fragments. They had once been the lettre de cachet for Denise, which Madame had destroyed before he came. "Yes," she said, "though the despatch is useless now, none the less I thank you from the bottom of my heart."

"Useless," Andre stammered.

"For two reasons," she smiled. "The agent from who you forced that despatch at the peril of your life took poison an hour after he was lodged at the Bastile. You had not heard? Well, the dead tell no embarrassing tales. Secondly," she pulled out her watch, "the Jacobites have already been informed in the King's own handwriting that they might have a forgery in my writing imposed on them, and that information has already been privately conveyed to the English Government. The English would not give a sou for the secret despatch to-day."

So that was how Madame had spent her night, and it had left her radiant as Aphrodite rising from the foam, while he, Andre, was oppressed by the weariness of the defeated.

"Yes, the Marquise de Beau Sejour is safe, you are safe, Vicomte, and I am safe, and the King is happy and well. The only persons who are not

The Bright Side.

Mr. Jurgins had been suddenly afflicted with a stiff neck. Not only was it a painful stiffness, but it caused him to twist his head around until he seemed to be trying to look behind him over his left shoulder, and his head was rigid in that pose.

"Of all the confounded trials a man was ever subjected to," he said, "this is the limit. They say to look on the bright side of our afflictions, but I'd like to know how I could make use of this stiff neck."

"My dear friend," said the optimist, "think what a golden opportunity this is to sit for your picture without having to allow the photographer to twist your head around that way and jab those ice cold tongs into the back of your neck."—Judge.

The Conclusion.

A group of workmen were arguing during the dinner hour. A deadlock had been reached when one of the men on the losing side turned to a mate who had remained silent during the whole of the debate.

"'Ere, Bill," he said, "you're pretty good at a argymen'. Wot's your opinion?"

"I ain't a-goin' to say," said Bill. "I thrashed the matter out afore with Dick Grey."

"Ah," said the other artfully, hoping to entice him into the fray, "an' what did you arrive at?"

"Well, evenchually," said Bill, "Dick 'e arrived at the 'orspital an' I arrived at the perlice station!"—London Tit-Bits.

Self Appreciation.

"Why don't you go to work?" asked the severe looking woman.

His Preference.

"Always do right, young man," said the parson, "and your friends will stand by you."

Family Greetings.

Larder Lake Goldfields

As stated in my news letters last summer I then began investigating the Larder Lake district north of Cobalt. I have done so thoroughly, and from personal investigation on the ground, the employment of reliable engineers and a corps of experienced prospectors, I and my associates have now ample proof of the great value of this field.

We know so surely what is there (and what immense probabilities there are as well) that we have already put nearly $150,000.00 cash into the field.

Our employees on the ground number nearly one hundred and our stamp mill will very soon be in operation.

I am a practical mining man, and I need hardly say that we would not put in such money and work unless fully justified.

The width of the veins or reefs in sight, and the values they bear when such width is considered, is extraordinary. In Africa such reefs are profitably mined when bearing but a few pennyweights of gold to the ton—at Larder Lake average assays from across many reefs run ounces of gold to the ton. An ounce is equal to $20, and the cost of mining and milling should not exceed $2.50.

I and my associates see many millions of dollars of clean legitimate profits before us in these goldfields.

By forming a company, putting up our hard cash, as stated above, and getting in first, we have secured thirty-seven forty acre claims, which we believe to be the cream of the Larder Lake Goldfields.

Our present stamp mill is a small one. We want a larger mill—from 100 to 200 stamps—and we must spend money in opening up our large acreage.

We have to put in considerable money, and, indeed, would carry the whole thing ourselves but that, like everything else, we have other interests as well to take care of.

We are therefore affording others the opportunity of joining us and sharing with us the large profits we are going to make—profits from dividends, and also from the increase of market value in our stock.

Our Company is known as the LARDER LAKE PROPRIETARY GOLDFIELDS, LIMITED, and among the directors and gentlemen identified with it are the following: Col. G. Sterling Ryerson, ex-M.P.P.; Senator L. V. Ulrey; Lieut.-Col. A. N. Worthington, Member Dominion Parliament; T. Herbert Lennox, Member Provincial Parliament; Chas. H. Waterous, ex-Mayor of Brantford; E. P. Bucke, of "Granby" fame; Dr. D. H. Piper, of London; P. Kirkgaarde, M.E., Member National Geographical Society; Sylvester Jenckes, President Jenckes Machine Company; William Farwell, President Eastern Townships Bank; C. P. Brown, of Toronto; Dr. Preston, Member Provincial Parliament, and others of like standing.

For the purposes mentioned above a limited amount of stock is offered by the underwriters (Canada Mines, Limited) at their first ground floor price of $1.00 per share. This is being subscribed for rapidly and the next allotment will be at a materially advanced price. The stock will then be listed on the exchanges and placed on the New York and Boston curbs, when, as in every proposition I have been connected with, it will, without doubt, command a legitimate market at a still higher price.

THIS OPPORTUNITY WILL NOT LAST LONG.

Those desiring further particulars, maps, detailed reports, etc., before joining us, please write, 'phone or telegraph me AT ONCE.

ANNIE'S SELF RESPECT.

New Servant Ranked Below the Dog and Couldn't Stand For It.

A lady who lives on the north side had occasion a few days ago to go through the ordeal of engaging a new housemaid. The young woman who had applied for the place was evidently not a native of the United States. In fact, it was apparent that she had been in this country only a little while.

"Can you cook?" asked the woman who expected to be the mistress in case they came to an agreement concerning terms.

"Yis, Oi can that."

"How about washing?"

"Well, ma'am, not sayin' annything ag'in the washin's you may have, Oi'd rather take less and let somebody else do it."

She was a pretty girl, with rather shapely hands, and it was hardly reasonable to blame her for desiring to preserve her beauty if arrangements could be effected that would make such a course possible. So it was decided that she might by accepting a dollar a week less than she would have otherwise received omit the washing.

There was some further questioning, which proceeded satisfactorily to both sides until the girl was asked why she had "left her last place."

"Well, Oi'm that ashamed Oi hardly like to tell you," she said.

This at once aroused suspicion on the other side, and of course negotiations could proceed no further until the matter was thoroughly explained.

"You'd 'a' done it yourself if you'd 'a' been in my place," said the girl.

"That doesn't matter. I must know just what the trouble was, or I cannot engage you."

"Well, if you must know, the missus had a little dog."

"Yes?"

"And Oi had to take it out every day for a walk."

"I should think you would have enjoyed getting out."

"I did. It wasn't that Oi had annything ag'in the dog or the fresh air, but she always made me go out the front door when I took the dog, but when Oi went out by meself or with anny of the young men that come afther me we had to leave be the back door, and me self rayspect wouldn't stand for it."

"Very well, Annie. You may bring your trunk around. We haven't any dog to be aired."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Arctic Attractions.

"I cannot imagine," said the woman with the short sleeves, "why in the world the Eskimos live in their country after they have learned what is to be had and seen in civilized places. Just think! They have no theaters, no hotels, no trains, no street cars, no shops, no schools, no churches, no clubs, no yachts, no scandals. They positively have nothing that we have."

"Possibly that is the reason they stay where they are," ventured the man with the dinner jacket.

His Admiration.

"My friend," said a literary bohemian to his friend, an artist, "since we are misunderstood by the world, we must form a society for mutual admiration among ourselves. I therefore proclaim the superiority of your art and declare you to be the equal of Michael Angelo. And what do you admire in me?"

"Your good taste," said the other.—Bon Vivant.

Accuracy.

A bicycle policeman of the same nationality appeared against a man he had arrested for fast riding.

"How fast was he going?" asked the judge.

"Pretty fast," answered the policeman.

"As fast as a man can run?"

"Yis, your honor, he was going as fast as two min can run."—Green Bag.

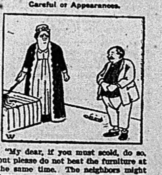
Poor Fellow!

"My husband," said Mrs. Gadabout, "is so careless about his clothes. His buttons are forever coming off."

"Perhaps," suggested Mrs. Knox, "they're not sewed on very well in the first place."

"That's just it. He's dreadfully slipshod about his sewing." — Catholic Standard and Times.

Careful of Appearances.



"My dear, if you must scold, do so, but please do not beat the furniture at the same time. The neighbors might form a wrong impression."—Fliegende Blatter.

PLIGHT OF THE ACTOR.

Behind the Scenes He Is, In a Manner, a Prisoner.

In a way, behind the scenes is a prison. It is surely one of the very few places where intelligent men and women are locked in their place of work and where no message from the outside world is allowed to reach them. There is a tradition that actor folk are of unusually emotional temperament, and if therefore a telegram is received at the stage door it is never delivered until after the performance. The message might be an invitation to supper, or it might announce that the actor's favorite brother has been hanged, or it might be an offer in a stock company to play twelve times a week, or it might tell the actor that he was the father of twins or that his wife would die without seeing him again unless he came at once to her bedside, but all of this information is supposed not to be good for the actor's emotional disposition, and the telegram is therefore given the same distinction as the "mash" note and kept until after the performance is finished. It cannot be said that the actor's emotional disposition is very seriously considered beyond the cast iron rule in regard to telegrams. His comfort and intelligence have been slightly flattered in a few theaters of very recent date, but for the most part the condition of behind the scenes in most playhouses is not calculated to breed particularly high thoughts of any kind. As a matter of fact, he is treated little better than when he was only a "strolling" player—a gypsy—several centuries ago.—Charles Belmont Davis in Outing Magazine.

"PLUG" TOBACCO.

An Old Farmer's Story of How the Name Originated.

In the jury room at the courthouse a few days ago an old time farmer said as he took a chew of tobacco:

"All the difference in the world in tobacco. I've tried twenty different kinds, and none is as good as that we used to make ourselves down on the farm. We would take a maple log while 'twas green and bore a dozen holes in it with a two inch auger. They were our molds. We selected our choicest tobacco and soaked it for a week or more in wild honey. Then we'd take the leaf to the log, get a good hickory tamping stick and go to work.

"A little ball of the honey soaked tobacco would be put in the auger hole and tamped in with the stick and a hammer. We'd pound it in solid. Ball after ball would be rammed in and pounded until the whole became a solid plug. When the hole was nearly full, we would pound in the plug, and then the log would be put away to season. As the wood dried the moisture would be drawn from the tobacco. And when it was split the sweetest tobacco ever made was taken from it. We called it 'plug' tobacco, and that's where the name originated."

Cat Laughter?

What was the origin of the phrase "Enough to make a cat laugh?" Dr. Murray's Dictionary notices only "Enough to make a cat speak," which is explained as signifying something extraordinary, especially something very good to drink. "Old liquor able to make a cat speak" is quoted from an early eighteenth century source, and therewith Stephano's remark to Caliban is compared, "Open your mouth; here is that which will give language to you, cat." Miss Squeers' maidservant said that only to see Miss Squeers' friend, Miss Price, toss her head was "enough to make a tomcat talk French grammar." But even that is not exactly laughing. Has it anything to do with the mythical Cheshire animal?—London Chronicle.

Dress In Old Massachusetts.

There was an ancient law in Massachusetts that ladies' dresses should be made long enough to hide their shoe buckles. In 1660 an act of the general court prohibited short sleeves and required garments to be lengthened so as to cover the arms to the wrists and gowns to the shoe buckles; "immoderate great breeches, knots of ribbon, broad shoulder bands, and they be, silk roses, double ruffs and cuffs" were forbidden. In the same colony, in 1653, I. Fairbanks was tried for wearing great boots, but was acquitted.

The Early Worm.

Entertaining a children's party at a certain millionaire's house in New York, a woman professional teller of stories to juveniles happened to employ the old proverb, "The early bird catches the worm." A little boy questioned the proverb promptly. "But wasn't the worm foolish," he asked, "to get up early and be caught?" "My dear," said the story teller, "that worm hadn't been to bed at all. He was just getting home."

Girl Friends.

Nell — Did you tell her I couldn't come? Belle — Yes, and she seemed surprised. Nell—But didn't you explain to her that I've got the chicken-pox? Belle—Yes; that's what surprised her. She said you were no chicken. —Catholic Standard and Times.

Five Indispensable Drugs.

"You need five drugs," said a foolish physician to a patient—"water, food, air, sleep and exercise." But the patient sought another doctor, and the foolish physician died poor.

Turn your sorrows outward into currents of sympathy and deeds of kindness, and they will become a stream of blessings.—Cuyler.

KITCHEN ECONOMIES.

A Substitute For the Fish Kettle and Other Makeshifts.

If you have no fish kettle tie the fish in a piece of coarse muslin before cooking it, so that there may be no delay in lifting it out when done. Rub it slightly with vinegar or add a little to the boiling water, as it whitens the fish and makes it firmer.

Small mustard tins make good spice boxes if a neat label is placed on the front of each tin. An earthen pan is the best receptacle for keeping bread fresh, but if this cannot be obtained a large tin with a good lid makes a capital substitute.

For the cutter which is used for stamping out rounds of pastry use lids of tins, tops of tumblers or wineglasses. A good set of weights and scales should find a place in every kitchen. Quantities may sometimes be guessed pretty accurately, but there are many things which must be weighed.

A salamander is used to impart a brown color to any preparation. The instrument is made red hot and held close to the preparation till it is browned. A fire shovel made red hot will do as well. If you have no tongs for turning steaks and chops, this can be done with two spoons.

Every housekeeper knows that by using a fork the juice runs out and is wasted, and the meat will look white inside.

When pinched with the spoons it should feel soft; if hard, it is too much cooked; if spongy, it is underdone. A chair placed upside down on another chair makes a very good stand for a jelly bag. A tall music stool is still better. Cheesecloth folded four times makes a much better strainer than the old fashioned flannel bag. Dip it first in boiling water and let the straining be done before the fire. If an egg whisk is not possessed, a plate and a long handled knife will do as well.

Covering Furniture.

An original idea for covering furniture has been tried and proved successful by a woman who wished to have some unsightly chairs in her furnished flat improved. She bought a lot of Roman blankets with wide dark blue and red stripes and had an upholsterer cover her sofa and chairs with them, just as though he were using tapestry or velours. These looked so well that she has had her bedroom chairs also covered with blankets having alternate pink and floral stripes. She has had portieres and inside curtains made of blankets matching those on the chairs, and the effect is really charming, and, as the blankets are very cheap, they cost much less than one would suppose. She says that everything depends upon the color of the blankets chosen. Of course very pronounced stripes would be ugly upon furniture, but the more subdued or delicate colors give a most satisfactory appearance to a room. Here is an opportunity for the amateur upholsterer to try her hand.

Rhubarb Recipes.

Rhubarb and Orange Marmalade.—String and cut in pieces one inch long two pounds of rhubarb. Peel half a dozen oranges and shred the yellow rind. Put it into a preserving kettle with the oranges, rhubarb and a pound and a half of granulated sugar and place over a slow fire. Cook and stir until it is the right consistency and then pour into jars, but do not cover until quite cold.

Rhubarb Jam.—To each pound of cut rhubarb allow one pound of sugar and one lemon. Peel the lemons as thin as possible and slice them, removing all seeds. Cut the rhubarb into pieces an inch long and into the bowl on top of the lemon and the peel, then put the sugar on top of the rhubarb, cover and set away in a cool place overnight. In the morning put the mixture into a preserving kettle and let it simmer gently for three-quarters of an hour. Remove it from the stove, allow it to cool and pack into jars, covering it with paraffin or brandied paper.

Dressmaking Hints.

New cotton often causes needles to break because of its exceeding harshness. This difficulty may be overcome by rubbing along the part to be sewn with a dry piece of soap. The plan answers equally well whether the work be done by hand or machine. Don't hang skirts wrong side out when putting them away. They are bound to crease, and with light ones, so a professional dressmaker says, whatever dust has been collected by the lining and clung in spite of your brushing is bound to sift through to the right side and stick. Go over skirt linings every couple of months with a cloth wrung out—as hard as you can—of water. That cloth should be just one tiny remove from perfectly dry. But the amount of dust it will collect from what you probably thought was a perfectly clean lining is astonishing.

Fireproofing.

Muslin, net and gauze may be made incombustible by using half the weight of whitening with the starch. Another plan is to dissolve half an ounce of alum or salammoniac in water and add to it the water in which the material is to be rinsed. Wood may be made noninflammable by soaking it in a solution of equal parts of isinglass and alum.

Wrinkled Clothing.

A satisfactory way of taking wrinkles out of a coat and skirt, and one that is often more convenient than pressing, is to hang the garment in the bathroom over the tub. Close the windows and turn on the hot water. In two or three hours they will be thoroughly steamed, after which they should be hung in the fresh air.

SELECTIONS

GILA MONSTERS.

Their Bite Is Sometimes Fatal and Always Dangerous.

In a recent issue of the Scientific American an article appeared written by D. Allen Willey describing the Gila monster. The statement was made in the article that scientists had questioned whether its bite was fatally poisonous, as has been supposed. W. C. Barnes of Las Vegas, N. M., claims to know of two cases, in one of which death resulted. Mr. Barnes writes as follows:

"The first man was in Tombstone, Ariz. The Gila was tied by the leg in a saloon as a curio, and a drunken gambler named Brown was teasing it. He carelessly stuck his first two fingers into its mouth, which immediately closed down on them and could not be released until the reptile's head was cut off and the jaws cut apart. Brown suffered horrible agony for almost two days, and in spite of all efforts he died.

"The second case was in the fall of 1889. Walter Vail started from the Empire ranch, near Benson, Ariz., to ride into town on horseback, some fifteen miles. A short distance from the ranch a monster was sluggishly dragging its way across the road. Thinking to take it in for a friend, he got down and killed it, or at least he thought he killed it. To carry it easily he tied it on his saddle behind him, using his saddle string for the purpose. As he loped along he thought to assure himself it hadn't dropped off by reaching around behind him with his right hand and feeling for the monster.

"It was there and not nearly as dead as he thought. His first finger went into the reptile's mouth clear to the knuckle, and instantly those jaws with the long, sharp, daggerlike teeth closed on Vail's finger. With his left hand he managed to get his knife out and cut the saddle strings and then had to dissect the head and jaws to get his finger from their grip.

"Vail then spurred his horse into Benson and found an engine in the yards. A hasty exchange of telegrams with the division superintendent and Tucson took place, and in a few moments he was on the engine and racing over the road for Tucson, where an eminent surgeon resided at that time. Vail lay at death's door for two months, and that finger today is useless and shriveled up from the effect of the bite."

A Denatured Alcohol Test.

A careful test of denatured alcohol was lately made by the driver of an automobile, who drove his machine from New York to Philadelphia with alcohol fuel. He found advantages and disadvantages in the use of it. The auto consumed three times as much alcohol as it would have consumed of gasoline, but a part of the excess was due to carelessness. The speed was less than gasoline would have given, and the power developed was less. But it is to be born in mind that the engine was not constructed to use alcohol. The new fuel is absolutely safe, and has a less disagreeable odor. On the whole, he got everything he expected out of alcohol, and, although he does not expect a general adoption of it for pleasure vehicles, he foresees a large use of it by the farmers of the west.—Youth's Companion.

The Chinese Farmer.

Harry L. Paddock, United States consul at Amoy, China, writes: "The Chinese farmer is up before daybreak and at work in his sterile fields—fields whose productivity has been exhausted except under high fertilization. He returns to his little shanty after nightfall. To the view of the foreigner he never rests, and for this never ending labor he raises a crop of rice or corn that does not support his family for the year. His clothing consists of a loin cloth in summer and a coarse cotton suit in the winter. Farmers, like all laborers and artisans of China, work hard to live. Laborers earn 10 cents a day, masons 15 cents, artisans 10 to 20 cents and clerks 40 to 50 cents."

England's War Footing.

It is seven years since the British empire reeled from the blow dealt to its military prestige in South Africa, but all the good resolutions formed then have come to nothing. There is not the slightest doubt that had England possessed a national statesman of courage and foresight the opportunity might have been turned toward better things, but we had none such. We are today in a relatively worse position than we were in 1899.—London Broad Arrow.

Our Own Honesty.

While the Japanese are being lectured on the necessity for commercial honesty it is instructive to read that a line of $2.75 shoes from America was lately landed in Australia of which the Sydney Bulletin says, "The only scrap of real leather about them was a shaving on the soles, the rest consisting of a cloth that looked like kid, some wood, some paper and about eighty stitches."—Springfield Union.

Skyscrapers For Egypt.

American skyscrapers from nine to ten stories high are to be erected near the pyramids of Gizeh, in Egypt. Permission for the erection of homes and hotels in the great plain extending from Eskebieh to the Nile and covered with ancient sphinxes and structures has been granted by the Egyptian government. Several associations have been formed for the building of large hotels in this district.

FIND PREHISTORIC BONEYARD.

Excavations Reveal the Largest Mastodon Ever Uncovered In Alaska.

What is perhaps the largest mastodon ever uncovered completely in Alaska was uncovered during the last six months at a place near Circle City by Max L. Lohbrunner. The exact place of the location of the mastodon is on Alice Creek, a tributary of Mineral Creek, which flows into Woodchopper Creek.

To judge of the other dimensions of the animal it must only be said that one tusk of the mastodon which is still intact is over nine feet eight inches long, and has a circumference of eighteen inches. The jaws of the animal still have teeth four in number in the jaw. Each of these teeth, which have been taken out and replaced, weigh fifty pounds apiece. The other parts of the mastodon are in a poor state of preservation compared with the tusk, although the bones that have been collected weigh in the neighborhood of 1,000 pounds.

Lohbrunner, who got the bones, dug them out at a depth of eighty feet below the surface of the ground. It took a great amount of care and pains on his part to see that the bones were not burned to charcoal while he was excavating and thawing the ground.

Lohbrunner has moved part of the animal into storage at Circle City and will hold it there until the spring time, when it will be removed to Seattle, where it will be put together and eventually find its way into the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, if the Smithsonian Institution does not get it before that time.

In speaking of his find Lohbrunner said: "Alice Creek, where I found this mastodon, is perhaps one of the most wonderful on earth, from the standpoint of research. It seems to be the boneyard that a lot of the prehistoric animals made for in order to die or to be killed. We have found on the creek the skeletons of mastodons, muskox, caribou, bear, and other animals. If this creek ever goes into a hydraulic mining proposition the world will be astounded with the many finds of bones of animals of prehistoric times."

ALASKA'S BIG BEARS.

The Largest Flesh Eating Animals In the World.

Very few persons really know that the largest flesh-eating animals in the world are found in America. People generally believe that the African lion is the king of beasts, but he is not nearly as large or as powerful an animal as the large brown bear of sub-Arctic America.

The bears are not as ferocious or combative as the lions, nor are they nearly as vicious as they are given credit for being, but the largest of them are much larger and more powerful than any of the lions. It is safe to say that the largest of the brown bears of the north would weigh three times as much as the largest specimen of lion, and is beyond all question greatly superior in strength.

If brought together in combat, the bear would at first appear very clumsy. It would not be capable of the quick rush or the catlike spring of the lion.

It would not attack, but would remain entirely on the defensive, meeting its adversary with blows of such rapidity and terrific force as at once to illustrate its superiority not only in strength, but in action. I do not believe that there is an animal in the world that can act more quickly or effectively or can aim its blows with greater certainty than the bear.

The large brown bears of the Alaska peninsula, south of the Behring Sea, are among the largest bears of the world, and it is evident that there is no part of the world outside of America in which such large flesh-eating animals are found. The bears are flesh-eaters, or carnivorous, yet there are none of them that depend upon flesh for food, and with most of them flesh comprises but a very small percentage of their food.—Scribner's Magazine.

Railways of Canada.

The total number of miles of railway in operation in Canada in 1906 is placed at 21,353, as compared with 20,487 for 1905. But seventy-four miles of iron rails now remain as a relic of former days. As indicative of the expansion in transportation facilities it may be pointed out that 3,071 miles of railway were under construction on June 30 last, as compared with 1,066 on the same date of the preceding year. The total number of locomotives is placed at 2,931; first-class cars, 1,289; second-class cars, 716; cattle and box cars, 61,929. The grand total of cars of all classes in use is 99,874. Of these 91,015 are fitted with automatic couplers and 85,616 with air brakes.

Statistics of traffic show 27,989,782 passengers carried last year, and 57,-966,713 tons of freight. The number of passengers increased by over two and one-half million, and the number of tons of freight by over seven millions, as compared with the preceding year. The total earnings of railways for the last year were $125,322,-865, as compared with $106,467,198 for 1905. The capital invested in Canadian railways has reached the large sum of $1,332,498,704. The records of fatal accidents last year shows a death list of 16 passengers, 139 employes and 206 others killed in various ways, a total of 361, as compared with 468 in 1905. Only one passenger in 1,749,361 was fatally injured. In respect to passenger traffic earnings the report shows total earnings of $33,392,188, for a total train mileage of 28,071,648, giving earnings per mile of $1,189. Electric railways show a total mileage at the end of June last of 813 miles. Ontario has 441 miles, and Quebec comes next with 198 miles. Net earnings for the year totalled $4,291,-834. Twelve passengers were killed, as compared with 30 in 1905.

AN ARGUMENT OF FORCE.

Napoleon Smashed a Vase, and the Treaty Was Signed.

Early in April, 1797, the people of Austria demanded peace with France. Negotiations were begun in the vicinity of Leoben. Bonaparte, in an interview with the Austrian plenipotentiaries, said to them, "Your government has sent against me four armies without generals, and this time a general without an army." In the treaty which the Austrian commissioners projected the first article stipulated that the emperor of Austria thereby recognized the French republic. "Erase it!" exclaimed Napoleon. "The existence of the republic is as plain as the sun. This article is only fit for the blind. We are our own masters and shall establish any government we prefer. If one day the French people," he continued, "should wish to create a monarchy, the emperor might object that he had recognized a republic." The preliminaries were soon settled, Napoleon signing for France, thus placing himself on an equal footing with the emperor of Austria. The formal treaty known as Campo Formio was signed in October, 1797, Austria fulfilling the pledges she had already given. The Austrian plenipotentiary protested against the distribution of the provinces beyond the Adige. Napoleon was angered at this, and, seizing a vase, dashed it to the ground, exclaiming, "If it is not so arranged I will break your monarchy as I have broken this vase!" This argument of force, as demonstrated to the diplomat was convincing, and the treaty was signed.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION.

Don't Develop the Mind at the Expense of the Body.

The man or woman who would train the mental faculties without any reference to the physical shows a faulty qualification for the work in which he or she may be engaged. The mind may be ever so well trained and stored with knowledge of the books, but unless there is behind it a reasonably strong body life runs the risk of being a failure; if not that, an existence of pain that serves as a limitation upon its possibilities. It is a species of cruelty to educate the mind at the expense of the body. Better let a child grow up into manhood or womanhood with an inferior education than with a better education of the mind and a body weakened in the effort.

The fact that so many men in this country who have succeeded in business and in professional and public life have been the sons of farmers, whose early life has been spent out of doors, has been a subject of remark. May it not be accounted for on the ground that in their boyhood their physique was developed so that in after life, besides their mental acquirements, they had strong bodies with which to do the work they have so successfully performed? This is not only possible, but very probable.

A Stolen Trade Secret.

The manufacture of tinware in England originated in a stolen secret. Few readers need to be informed that tinware is simply thin sheet iron plated with tin by being dipped into the molten metal. In theory it is an easy matter to clean the surface of iron. Dip the iron in a bath of boiling tin and remove it enveloped in the silvery metal to a place of cooling. In practice, however, the process is one of the most difficult of arts. It was discovered in Holland and guarded from publicity with the utmost vigilance for nearly half a century. England tried to discover the secret in vain until James Sherman, a Cornish miner, crossed the channel, insinuated himself surreptitiously into a tin plate manufactory, made himself master of the secret and brought it home.

Women and Jewelry.

"Women know a great deal more about buying jewelry now than they knew twenty-five years ago," said a jeweler. "When I first started in the business a clerk with a persuasive tongue could talk a woman into buying most anything. It wasn't safe for her to step inside a shop unless she had a man along. Now the average woman knows more about jewels than the average man. Of course they can be fooled—anybody can but an expert—but as a rule she buys with a surprising knowledge of value, and her taste in the cutting and setting is excellent."

Brains.

"A man stood on his head twenty minutes in order to win a wager. He died the next day."

"What killed him? Congestion of the brain?"

"No; if he had had any brains he wouldn't have done it."

Specified.

"When in trouble," said the eminent lecturer, "refrain from worrying."

"But, doctor," asked a woman in the audience, "how can we?"

"Anyway," replied the lecturer, "refrain from worrying other people."

MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve; the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

Picton Notes

SERIOUS TYPHOID EPIDEMIC IN THE TOWN — SUDDEN DEATH—LICENSES RENEWED.

Picton, April 23. — "You had better send for the doctor, I think I am going to die." Going into his home, after being out in the garden Robert Heffer sank in a chair with these remarks. Within a few hours he was dead. This very sudden call came to this well-known citizen on Sunday. Though sixty-six years of age he was in good health and his death was a great shock to his friends The late Mr. Heffer is survived by his widow.

After a two days' session the license commissioners for Prince Edward have decided to renew the licenses of all those hotels granted licenses last year This included, in Picton, the Royal, Quinte, Picton, Tecumseh and Queen's, two in Wellington and one in Consecon. However, the Globe Hotel, Picton, George Williams proprietor, has only been granted a three months' extension.

There is quite an epidemic about town of typhoid fever and as yet there has been no solution reached for the cause. Medical Health Officer Dr. J. W. Wright has advised all uptown residents to boil the drinking water. P. S. Maclean, editor of the Times, was struck a couple of days ago; J. MacDowell and Miss Geraldine Farrington, daughter of Mayor Farrington, have been quite ill for several days. There are a large number of others whose illness has also been pronounced typhoid.

Mrs William Haskell is lying at her home seriously ill, the result of a fall down the cellar stairs. She was badly cut and bruised, which injuries together with the severe shock to system, have put her under medical care.

Former Resident Died At Tonawanda, N. Y.

A sad death occured this morning at Tonawanda, N. Y., when Mrs. Bruce Cushing ,a former resident of this city, whose maiden name was Miss Edna Clarke, passed away after an illness of about ten days. The deceased lady was a sister of Mrs. W. A. A. Chown, of this city, and was, while living here, much esteemed for her many graces of character. She was married to her now sorrowing husband in June last, and was only 21 when she died. Much sympathy will be extended to the stricken relatives.

Drill Shed Tenders.

The time for receiving tenders for the erection of the Belleville drill shed expired yesterday, but it will be some days before it is known who the successful tenderer is. This is owing to the fact that the advertisement for tenders was published in Grit papers all over the country, and the Tenders have to be transmitted to the Department of Public Works at Ottawa where they will be opened and awards made.

The Oldest Old Man.

New York, April 24. — A despatch from Santiago de Cuba, says: Antonio Infanto, a negro, is dead at the age of one hundred and fifty years. He was born in 1757, nineteen years before the beginning of the American revolution.

Probably Oldest Yacht On the Lakes

IS THE KATIE GRAY, OF OSWEGO, FORMERLY OWNED IN THIS CITY.

Oswego Palladium: When the yacht Katie Gray slipped into the water at the Yacht Club, Saturday, it marked the beginning of her twenty-fifth season as a member of the local fleet. The Gray is known from one end of Lake Ontario to the other and is probably one of, if not the oldest, yacht afloat on the Great Lakes. Never does she sail into any of the harbors on the summer cruises that some old yachtsman, who has long ago joined the verandah squad, does not hail, "Is that the Katie Gray?" Despite her long service, however, she is still a remarkably staunch craft, and with her favorite breeze, over the quarter, can show her heels to most of the modern racing machines.

The Gray was built at Cobourg, Ont., in 1875, by Alexander Cuthbert, a designer of international reputation. She was made for Campbell, Benson & Co., of Belleville, Ont., and they sailed her until 1882, when she was purchased by Ross Cummings, of Trenton. He retained possession of her until the latter part of August that year, when he sold her to the late W. B. Phelps, of this city, and it was then that she first flew the flag of the Oswego Yacht Club. Even at that the Gray had a great record. She won the championship of the Bay of Quinte in 1876 and the Toronto races in 1879, getting a silver tea set and $100 as a prize. She beat the Ella at Kingston in 1879 for $200 a side in a race that is still remembered and discussed by the veteran yachtsmen. The Surprise fell a victim to her in 1878 in a $200 a side race, and in 1882 she won the Oswego regatta. For a number of years after that she was also the champion of the Oswego fleet.

All of the yachts with which the Gray competed in her racing days are now but a memory. No more in these waters is seen the Cygnet, of Toronto, with Capt. Hugh L. Dennis at the tiller; the Garfield, of Kingston, Capt. Don Claus; the Laura, of Oswego, Capt. Allen Ames; the Cricket, of Oswego, Capt. John T. Mott; the Gracie, of Belleville, Capt. R. M. Roy, or the Ella, of Oswego, Capt. Nelson Stone.

These are but a few of the old-time craft to which the Gray used to show her heels when she first became a member of the local fleet. Those were the good old days in yachting circles, and if the Katie could but tell the story of her experiences it would be equal in interest to one of Morg. Robertson's sea stories. She has twice been nearly entirely rebuilt in the quarter of a century that the boat has called Oswego her home port, but she retains her old lines, and from Niagara to the Cape is recognized as "the mammy of them all."

Marshall Missing

MAN CHARGED WITH PERJURY WAS CONSPICUOUS BY HIS ABSENCE.

Robert Marshall, whose home is in the Township of Elzevir, was to have been tried here to-day before Judge Deroche, on a charge of perjury, but he did not appear and His Honor said the case was enlarged until May 9th. Recently a liquor case was tried before Mr. Jos. James, J. P., of Actinolite, and it is alleged that at that trial Marshall committed perjury by swearing that his son was 21 years of age, whereas, a few days previous to the liquor case, Marshall in another case swore that his son was only 18 years of age. Hence the charge of perjury. After the charge had been laid Marshall was allowed out on bail, which will be estreated if he does not appear for trial.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"PAINTING THE TOWN," TO-MORROW.

"Painting the Town," the big spectacular musical hurrah, presented by the Chas. H. Yale Amusement Company, will be the attraction at the Carman to-morrow night. The story is of the bright side of life, tremendously funny, full of hustle, bustle and go, constructed to please the eye and ear. The play is an unusual entertainment, bright, clever and clean with nothing to offend and everything to please, and written for laughing purposes only. The scenery and costumes are said to be of the most elaborate description with many new and striking mechanical effects, while the music, by Herman Perlet, is new, striking and original.

The Batchelor Case.

WILL BE TRIED BY MAGISTRATE MASSON THIS AFTERNOON — HUSBAND AND WIFE MET IN POLICE STATION.

David J. Batchelor, who was arrested in Toronto on a charge of deserting his wife and child, was last evening brought here by Sergt. Hayes and locked up. It appears that on Tuesday evening the accused was arrested in the Queen City, whilst walking with a woman whom it is alleged he followed to Toronto. Whilst in the police station this morning the wife and husband had a conversation, and the prospects are that the trouble may be amicably arranged between them.

Batchelor was brought up at 10 o'clock before Magistrate Masson, but the case was enlarged until 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Both parties are young, and have only been married about six years. They have one child, a boy, who is four years of age.

Health Statistics.

RETURNS TO THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH FOR MARCH.

The returns to the Provincial Board of Health from 725 divisions registrars for March gave 2,738 deaths from all causes from a population of 2,088,346, making a death rate of 13.7 in a 1000.

The cities and towns reported 1,546 deaths from an estimated population of 1,010,406, or 18.3 per 1000 and the rural districts reported 1,192 deaths from a population of 1,077,900, making the death rate 13.2 to the 1000.

In February 1,077 cases of contagious diseases, with 251 deaths, were reported. Last month the total of cases was 1,214, with 280 deaths, the figures for March, 1906, being 922, and 276 respectively.

Another Fuel Fake

On Monday a man named Geyer gave what was apparently a successful exhibition of burning ashes at the Park Avenue Hotel in New York. Three boilers are used for heating the hotel. Mr. Geyer made one boiler do the work of three for one hour, and with a smaller quantity of fuel than would ordinarily have been used in one furnace. He mixed three parts of ashes with one part coal, and then saturated the heap with a secret solution consisting of a tablespoonful of yellowish powder in a gallon of water. Four or five gallons were used to saturate the ashes and coal. In seven minutes the entire mass was glowing at a white heat and maintained a pressure of 76 pounds of steam for one hour, according to the New York Herald.

Scared By Threats.

The freight handlers at the G.T.R. sheds, Kingston, are on strike for higher wages. It is reported that spare brakemen sent from Brockville to handle the freight congestion, were driven from the city by threats upon their lives.

SENTENCED FOR MURDER.

Sailor Gets Twenty-Five Years For Killing Master-at-Arms.

New York, April 25.—Twenty-five years' imprisonment, 20 of which shall be at hard labor, is the sentence of the court-martial which recently tried Maurice Burke, a seaman attached to the cruiser Tennessee, for murdering James A. Douglass, chief master-at-arms, and assaulting and attempting to kill William McCool, master-at-arms, both of that vessel.

Burke's crime was committed on the night of Feb. 6 last, while the Tennessee was lying at the League Island navy yard, Philadelphia. He returned intoxicated after being given shore leave, and when summoned before his superiors, drew a revolver, killing Douglass and wounding McCool.

Frank Miner Found Guilty.

Binghamton, N. Y., April 25.—The jury in the trial of Frank Miner, charged with the murder of James Aaron Tobey, at Vestal, on Oct. 25, by shooting and then firing the house into which Tobey's body was dragged after death, to consume the remains, brought in a verdict yesterday afternoon of murder in the second degree.

FIREMEN HAD HARD FIGHT.

Overcome by Poisonous Fumes on Burning Freight Steamer.

New York, April 25.—The harbor firemen had a hard fight yesterday, with a fire which destroyed the freight steamer Pioneer, causing a loss of $75,000. The Pioneer arrived here Tuesday night from Newark, N. J., with a miscellaneaus cargo of cotton, jute, red lead, cylinders of oil, carboys of acid, and cylinders of carbonic acid gas for trans-shipment. The fire started while the steamer was lying at her pier in the North River. When the fire boats arrived she was almost entirely enveloped in flames. The noxious fumes and dense, black smoke which rolled up from the burning steamer made the firemen's work extremely difficult. They worked in relays, and several of them were overcome. The flames were prevented from spreading to the pier and other adjoining property.

Parliament Disturbs Peace.

St. Petersburg, April 25.—A number of Provincial Governors have arrived here to support the movement of the reactionists in favor of a dissolution of Parliament, on the ground that the debates are causing dangerous agitation and ferment.

LAURIER WAS SILENT

Did Not Speak on Subject of Imperial Defence.

Gen. Botha on Naval Defence—Presence of Transvaal Premier Continues to Supply Dramatic Moments —Haldane Is Pleased—British Premier Says No Obligation Exists for Britain to Defend Whole Empire.

London, April 25.—It is noticeable that Premier Laurier has observed complete silence during the discussion of plans for defence at the sittings of the Imperial Conference, although every other Premier spoke on this subject. It is understood that Canada does not favor participation in the schemes for Imperial Defence.

Gen. Botha, when the question of naval defence arose, said he could only give a pious opinion, since, on an historic occasion, Great Britain had barred the Transvaal's way to the sea.

The presence of Gen. Botha continues to supply the conference with some dramatic moments, as on Saturday, when War Secretary Haldane, sitting opposite and looking straight into Gen. Botha's eyes, confessed that Great Britain had entered upon the Boer war without adequate preparation, but that the lesson of preparedness had been well learned since by both the late and present Governments.

A Pertinent Question.

London, April 25.—In the House of Commons yesterday Premier Campbell-Bannerman stated he was unaware of any country which on the whole gives as favorable trade treatment to the self-governing colonies as did the United Kingdom. Harold Cox asked the Premier whether the British obligation to defend the self-governing colonies had ever been defined, and what reciprocal obligation the colonies had undertaken for the defence of the United Kingdom.

The Premier replied that the obligation of the United Kingdom to defend the Empire was independent of any written agreement. There seemed no doubt the colonies recognize an obligation to assist in the defence of the Empire as a whole.

Real Security Now.

In the House of Commons Mr. Haldane, Minister of War, said he was rejoiced to know the colonial Premiers had decided his army scheme was the best pattern of organization, "so that we should have an imperial territorial force which would give us real security."

GUESTS OF BRITISH M.P.'S.

Laurier Says Labors of Conference Will Result In Good.

London, April 25.—(C. A. P.)—The M.P.'s in both Houses yesterday entertained to luncheon the Colonial Premiers. The interior of Westminster Hall was appropriately decorated, but did not present so brilliant a scene as on the occasion of the entertainment to the officers of the French fleet, two years ago. Prior to luncheon a reception was held, after which a procession was formed to the banqueting hall. Among the last to arrive were Sir Wilfrid and Lady Laurier.

The Prime Minister and practically the whole of the Cabinet and many other distinguished notabilities were present. The band played "The Maple Leaf Forever." After the usual loyal toasts, Premier Campbell-Bannerman proposed in appropriate terms the toast to "The Colonial Premiers," Balfour supporting.

Premier Laurier, responding, said no stranger could enter that hall without feeling respect and reverence, and without being oppressed by the ages, and chiefly by those which had done most for the liberty of mankind. The labors of the Colonial Premiers in this country would not be in vain, but would tend for good, and they would go back more impressed than ever with the sense of imperial unity, coupled with, and based on, local autonomy. Premier Botha also replied.

THE INCREASED POSTAGE.

Not In Best Interests of Country Says Senator Ellis.

Ottawa, April 25.—In the Senate yesterday Senator Ellis brought up the increased postage to the United States, questioning the increase being in the best interests of the country.

The minimum rate on a Canadian newspaper to the United States was one cent a package. The good which the circulation of Canadian newspapers did in the United States was to be seen each year by the large number of Canadians from the United States who took part in homecomings held in the towns and cities throughout the Dominion each year. Under the new postal rates the country weekly which cost $1 would have to pay 25 cents a year postage, and the semi-weekly $1.04. The result would be a falling off in the papers going to the United States.

Mail Driver Held Up.

Peterboro, April 25.—Yesterday morning, about 12.30, James Reid, who drives the mail from the post-office to the C.P.R. station here, was held up by an unknown man, who demanded the mail bags.

Just as his assailant was reaching for his hip pocket Reid struck him over the head with the heavy lock of an empty mail bag, and the blood remaining on the canvas of the bag shows that the blow took effect.

Boy of 13 Suicides.

Brockville, April 25.—The lifeless body of Ernest Perry, aged 13 years, was found hanging from a beam in a barn at Pitcairn Tuesday.

The parents of the boy are dead, and he had been making his home with a family at Pitcairn. It is alleged that he wanted to borrow a fishpole, and, on being refused, became downhearted. He took the pole, broke it in two and then went and hanged himself.

ANARCHY AT TOULON.

"Reds" Accused of Firing Government Arsenals.

Paris, April 25.—It is generally believed that the fire which caused 3,000,000 francs damage at Toulon yesterday was the work of incendiaries. Fuses were found lying about, and just before the fire started the fire brigade was called away to the other side of the town. These facts cause suspicion.

Like Battleship Disaster.

This instance brings to mind the decision of the Senatorial Committee which investigated the disaster of the battleship Iena. The report expressed the conviction that it was not accidental.

During the last eighteen months there have been no fewer than six supposed accidents at the Toulon arsenal. The Forges et Chantiers de la Mediterranie, a private concern, opposite the arsenal, has been free from accidents all this time.

Hotbed of Anarchy.

The Government works have experienced many anarchistic upheavals since the eight-hour day labor first was agitated.

The fire lasted from midnight well into the day, and the arsenal was only saved by the superhuman efforts of the soldiers and sailors. Several lives were reported to be lost.

BOURASSA ALWAYS SAME.

Replies to Laurier's Remarks About "Firebrands."

Ottawa, April 25.—Henri Bourassa, M. P., of Labelle, said yesterday:

"In Sir Wilfrid Laurier's reference to Canadian firebrands referred to in the cable despatches from London, I notice that he speaks of Mr. Bourassa 'and others.' I presume the latter reference is to Hon. Sydney Fisher's speech against preferential trade, in Montreal, on the day of the British general elections last year, and to Sir Wilfrid's own speech against the creation of an imperial council and the policy of imperial defence, delivered at the banquet of the Chambers of Commerce, in Montreal in 1904.

"Neither in Quebec nor elsewhere have I made use of any stronger language than these two honorable gentlemen employed on the occasions I have mentioned, but, of course, I have repeated my arguments outside of Quebec. The inference, therefore, would be that it is safer to be a 'firebrand' in Quebec than an imperial statesman in London.

"However, I will endeavor to stick to my present modest policy, which is the same in Quebec, in Ontario or anywhere else in the empire."

WANTED HUBBY ARRESTED.

For Eating With Another Woman In Restaurant.

Port Huron, Mich., April 25.—Mrs. Anna McClellan, lately from Mount Forest, Ont., rushed excitedly into the police station Tuesday evening and asked if she could have her husband arrested for eating with another woman. The police could not help her.

Mrs. McClellan is employed as a waitress in the Harrington Hotel. When her husband, accompanied by a woman, came into the dining-room and to her table, she refused to wait upon them.

She said she had trouble with her husband several months ago while living at Mount Forest.

CHICAGO EXPRESS WRECKED

Collided With Freight and Many Are Reported Injured.

Pittsburg, April 25.—The Chicago express on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which left this city for New York at 10.45 p.m., was wrecked last night near Bennet Station, on the West Pennsylvania division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, shortly after 11 o'clock.

Bennet Station is ten miles east of here. The express collided with a freight train.

Several persons are reported injured.

The passenger engine and the caboose of the freight train were demolished.

Minister and Miser.

Montreal, April 25.—Old Neil Brodie, one of the most eccentric characters Montreal has ever had, has passed away.

Formerly a minister of the Church of Scotland, he came to Canada years ago to escape the double liability he incurred as a large shareholder in the Glasgow Bank, which had failed. He preached for a time in Pictou County, N. S., and later drifted to Montreal, going into stock speculation. He was a shareholder in the Canadian Pacific and MacKays, and Montreal Street Railway, and owned a block of tenements in Griffintown, which were always in bad repair. He was known to pick up coal on the street and to rummage garbage barrels. He is known to be worth at least $100,000.

Irish Will Compromise.

London, April 25.—The spirit of compromise is having effect on the prospects of the Irish council bill, and yesterday its supporters were more hopeful of reconciling the differences regarding the terms of the proposed measure.

The outlook has so far improved that Mr. Birrell, chief secretary for Ireland, was able to announce in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon that he hoped to be able to introduce the bill May 7.

Sifton Holds Seat.

Winnipeg, April 25.—The Brandon election trial closed yesterday, when the petition against Hon. Clifford Sifton and the cross-petition against R. L. Richardson were both dismissed. Proceedings were merely formal.

Blizzard In Montana.

Missoula, Mont., April 25.—Western Montana is experiencing a severe blizzard, and snow is falling rapidly. On the Flat Head Indinn Reservation the snow is already 6 inches deep.

RIOTS WERE PUT DOWN.

Trouble Ended At St. Lucia, British West Indies.

St. Thomas, D.W.I., April 26.—Advices received here yesterday from Castries, Island of St. Lucia, British West Indies, where serious rioting was reported to have occurred, indicate that the trouble is ended. Discontented laborers and porters created serious disturbances at Castries during the afternoon of April 23, and business was suspended there Wednesday. During the rioting several persons, including the manager of the Colonial Bank, were injured. The manager's right leg was broken. The Governor of the Windward Islands, Sir Robert Llelwyn, arrived at Castries Wednesday, went through the town and personally enquired into the cause of the disorder, with the result that it was confidently believed that an amicable settlement has been arranged.

ALLIANCE IS THE WORD.

Spanish Paper So Terms Understanding Between Powers.

Madrid, April 26.—The Correspondencia De La Espana says it has diplomatic authority for stating that the effect of the meeting of King Alfonso and King Edward at Cartagent was the perfection of a far-reaching understanding for the purposes of war and peace.

It would have been considered in the last century, according to the paper, an alliance, but in modern diplomatic language it is an entente cordiale.

Everything concerning Morocco was ratified; everything in reference to the general European situation was discussed and the basis was formulated of an agreement which is now in the hands of the diplomatists.

MURDER PREMEDITATED.

Girl Kills Man Because He Was to Wed Another.

Oil City, Pa., April 26.—That Miss Belle Stroup, the Bradford (Pa.) dressmaker, who shot and killed Thaddeus S. Ross in the office of a physician here Wednesday, contemplated the deed, is shown by the fact that she left a will, bequeathing all her property, including oil lands, to her sisters; Mrs. Fred Ehret and Mrs. J. F. Aiken.

She also left a statement saying that Ross had promised to marry her in June next, and the first intimation she had that he did not intend to do so was a newspaper notice of the issuance of a marriage license to Ross and Miss Sampsell of Oil City.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS BAD BEACONS.

Lizard Lighthouse Often Invisible When Other Lights Are Seen.

London, April 26.—The familiar complaint of the unsuitability of electric lamps for lighthouses is again made. At the Government enquiry into the stranding of the steamer Suevic, the marine superintendent of the White Star Line and other nautical witnesses declared that the electric light at the Lizard was sometimes obscured by fog when lights in the houses ashore on the same level were visible.

They contended that electric lamps in lighthouses were not comparable with oil lamps, and said that the former might actually add to the dangers of the coast.

Left Bride At Altar.

Windsor, April 26.—Mrs. Davis of Detroit, a widow, came to Windsor with Dr. George W. Burbanks, formerly of Cincinnati, and intended to be married. Burbanks left her in the waiting room of the electric railway while he went to procure a license. Mrs. Davis waited in vain for two hours and then told the police her trouble.

She reported that she had given her prospective husband a letter containing over $500 to carry for her.

Rising Nipped In Bud.

Tokio, April 26.—Another threatened rising in Corea is believed to have been nipped in the bud by the prompt action of the Japanese administration.

The plans for the proposed outbreak are reported to have been of a comprehensive character, but owing to the timely discovery of the conspiracy, enabling the authorities to arrest the ringleaders and take steps to overawe their followers, all danger is believed to have been averted.

Canada's Fiscal Policy.

London, April 26.—(C. A. P.)—The Times, commenting on Canada's fiscal negotiations with European countries, says they indicate not only the loss of the fairest opportunity that has yet presented itself for welding the Empire, but the beginning of fresh economic developments, of which The Times cannot lightly predict the end.

Emperor to Receive Peasants.

St. Petersburg, April 26.—The Emperor to-day will receive 20 peasant deputies belonging to the Right party and to the Moderates, who will present him with an address, expressing their desire to work in harmony with the Emperor, and their hope of a speedy introduction of a system of general education.

Hundred Buildings Burned.

Miller's Falls, Mass., April 26.—One hundred and twelve buildings at Lake Pleasant, two miles from here, were burned yesterday, causing a loss estimated at $115,000.

Petawawa Land Grab.

Mr. Macdonald Makes Unfounded Charge Against Premier.

Hon. J. P. Whitney Denies Bad Faith in Any Degree--Minister of Militia Did Not Intend Giving Compensation--Confiscated Without Any Notice--Mr. Lemieux on Racial Issues--Delay in Judgment.

Ottawa, April 26.—There were some bitter references in the Commons yesterday morning to Ontario's position in the Petawawa matter.

E. M. Macdonald (Picton) declared that Premier Whitney less than a year ago had offered the Minister of Militia the tract of 52,000 acres at a nominal rental of $10 a year. The offer hadn't been accepted "because," he said, "the Premier of Ontario had practically said to the Minister of Militia and Defence: 'There are some of my political friends down there that have some timber licenses, and as soon as you settle with my political friends in the County of Renfrew and have given them the amount they are asking, then I will come round and do business with you.'"

Mr. Bourassa yesterday afternoon rebuked Hon. Mr. Lemieux working the racial issue one way in Ontario and the opposite way in Quebec. He criticized the amendment to the address, permitting Manitoba to increase their subsidies every five years, while the other provinces have to wait for the decennial census. He made the point that the address could not be considered unless recommended by His Excellency and reported from the committee of the whole. Hon. Mr. Fielding admitted that he had not adopted the right procedure.

Mr. Bergeron read from Le Nationaliste charging members of the Quebec Legislature with boodling, and dared the Premier (Mr. Gouin) to bring its editor to the Bar of the House. "It is common talk in the City of Quebec," said Mr. Bergeron, "that anything can be carried through the Legislature by the use of money."

Mr. Martin (Con., P. E. I.) protested against the discrimination against P. E. I., and moved an amendment granting also to Prince Edward an extra annual allowance of $100,000 a year for ten years. Mr. McLean (Con., P. E. I.) seconded the amendment, which was defeated.

Mr. Taylor (Leeds) called attention to the failure of Justice Magee to decide his cases. Mr. Aylesworth referred him to the Attorney-General of Ontario. Mr. Taylor then offered an amendment to a pending bill respecting Manitoba, providing that any judge who kept a case after submission for 90 days should have his salary stopped until the case was decided. Mr. Aylesworth opposed the amendment, and Mr. Taylor withdrew it.

The railway subsidies passed, involving at least from $3,500,000 to $7,000,000. The House went into supply and passed a large grist of estimates.

Premier Whitney Explains.

Toronto, April 26.—Premier Whitney made the following statement last evening:

"With reference to the assertions made in the House of Commons Wednesday regarding the Petawawa Camp matter, I desire to say that the Ottawa people must not be allowed to get away from the issue.

"No bad faith can be shown on our part. We were ready to do everything that was asked at any time by the Department of Militia, but insisted that the rights of the licensees and the rights of the Ontario Government in the timber dues should be adjusted and settled before any lease was granted. The Department of Militia decided to refuse this proposition of ours, and, without notice to us of their refusal, assumed to take over or confiscate the lands in question, which are, or were, at any rate, the property of the province.

"If it suits Mr. Fielding in the extremity in which he finds himself, to make charges of bad faith, well and good. I make no counter-charges of bad faith. I simply say that, without a word of warning, and without saying "By your leave," the Department of Militia reached out and took our land and our timber, and then practically asked us what we were going to do about it.

No Doubt About It.

"In answer to a question in the House of Commons on the 3rd of April, Sir Frederick Borden stated the position of the department in these words:

"'The Government has not taken the interest of the lumber licensees, and they have, therefore, no claim to compensation. The Ontario Government is not, by the British North America Act, entitled to compensation, and it is not intended to pay that Government any compensation.'

"There is no doubt, therefore, as to what his intentions were, and neither Mr. Aylesworth nor Mr. Fielding can get over this.

Well Enough Now, But—

"A man in Mr. Fielding's place might be engaged in better business than making charges of bad faith, for which he must know he has no foundation. It is all very well for Mr. Aylesworth to say now that they are willing to pay the licensees' claims, and it is all very well for Mr. Fielding to say now, as reported by The Gobe, 'If, however, the Government of Ontario thought that they had been badly treated by the Government, they were willing that the procedure should be settled by the Attorney-General of Ontario and the Minister of Justice with regard to deciding the method by which, if the right to compensation existed, that compensation should be settled.'

"These statements by two Ministers cover our whole case. If the Department of Militia had seen fit to use this language, no difficulty could have occurred; but, instead of that, the Minister of Militia took our property without warning, declared that we were not entitled to compensation, and that he would not give us compensation. Here you have the whole matter in a nutshell."

Not Worth Answering.

Mr. Whitney was then asked, "Have you seen the language used by E. M. Macdonald in the House of Commons Wednesday?"

His reply was "Yes."

"Have you any reply to make?"

"Certainly not; no answer whatever."

FALCONER FOR PRESIDENT.

Principal of Halifax College to Be Head of Toronto University.

Toronto, April 26.—Dr. Falconer, principal of Pine Hill College, Halifax, was yesterday chosen by the board of governors as president of Toronto University. He is at present in the Mediterranean, but his acceptance of the position is confidently anticipated.

Dr. Falconer is a Canadian born, and has achieved great scholastic distinction on both sides of the Atlantic. The following statement was made by the board of governors yesterday afternoon:

"Robert A. Falconer, M.A., B.D., D.D., LL.D., Litt. D., of Halifax, has been selected by the board of governors for the presidency of the University of Toronto The appointment was made at the regular meeting of the board and was entirely unanimous.

"A cablegram was sent to Dr. Falconer at Naples, where he is this week on his way to Greece. It is expected that he will at once return to Halifax in order to meet the board of trustees of Pine Hill College, of which he is principal, after which he will formally announce his decision in the matter of the Toronto appointment. It is believed that he will accept the appointment at an early date."

SLUR ON CANADIAN CATTLE.

If Embargo Is Not Removed, May Abolish Preference.

London, April 26.—(C. A. P.)—Senator Choquette has been talking to an occasional correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette.

Choquette says the cattle embargo is politically dishonest. It is a slur on Canadian cattle to say they are diseased, and if the British Parliament does not do something towards removing this slur Choquette thinks that, were a motion brought up in the Canadian House to abolish the British preference, it would, in its present humor, give it a majority.

Though Choquette says he has not directly discussed the matter with Laurier, he is of the opinion that Laurier would support such a motion.

CHARGES AGAINST DUNN.

Conduct of Vigilant's Captain to Be Investigated.

Thorold, April 26.—The charges against Captain Dunn, commander of the Government cruiser, Vigilant, will soon be investigated. Mr. H. H. Collier, K. C., of St. Catharines, has been appointed a commission to conduct an enquiry.

The captain is under suspension, pending the investigation. S. J. Inkster, formerly first officer of the Vigilant, accuses Captain Dunn of being a habitual drunkard. The present trouble started when the department, acting on a report from the senior officer, Captain Dunn, that he had become intoxicated while officer on watch, dismissed Inkster

These be the days when all properly constituted boys want to play outdoors and make a noise. Let them. Nay, more, encourage them in it. Good, healthy play is sending the red blood through a boy's veins with renewed vigor. And don't fret because you are afraid that some of the boys who make a noise are bad boys. They probably are; very few boys are altogether good. Boys of 12 who want to go out as missionaries are accidents, because boys are not burdened with goodness, and your boy will never win heaven beneath your wing, dear madam, or sir, as the case may be. But boys are healthy, and if there ever was a factor in building up a manly man, it is the outdoor play that makes for ruddy cheeks and bright eyes and a cold bath. Let the boy play when playtime comes. Let him get out in the open with his kind and run his legs off if he likes. If he's got it in him, it will mean a happier boy and a better man.

Talk about your armies of unemployed! That eight-mile procession led by the workmen who were discharged from the Woolwich arsenal will give Mr. Haldane something to think about. There is no use in employing men to make ammunition which the country doesn't need—but what are these men going to live on? Already the sums expended in the United Kingdom on armaments and poor relief are appalling. A readjustment of conditions would seem to be in order, but the dwellers in cities, or a great many of them, are unfit for country life or unwilling to try it.

Farmers in the vicinity of Hamilton don't believe in having anything wasted. It seems many of them hatch their eggs by the incubator method. If the eggs are found to be sterile they are taken away and sold to the innocent consumer as new-laid hen fruit. To make the punishment fit the crime the authorities should arrest the farmers who indulge in the above practice, and make them eat the eggs.

That is to say, that apparently if a veteran died, say, between about January, 1867, and the date of the passing of the Act, his next of kin have no claim. Nurse Haggarty Has Disappeared

WAS AT ONE TIME ON THE STAFF OF THE BELLEVILLE HOSPITAL.

Philadelphia, April 26.—Friends of Miss Eva Haggerty, one of the prettiest nurses in the women's hospital, are greatly worried over her disappearance from the hospital early Wednesday morning.

Two weeks ago Miss Haggerty, who had come here from Brockville, Canada, was taken ill, and Mrs. C. V. Brown, sister, was to have arrived yesterday to take the nurse back to Canada.

The last seen of Miss Haggerty was on Wednesday morning, when she was noticed gathering up her clothing and going into the hallway.

The young lady mentioned above was at one time on the nursing staff of the local hospital, and the many friends she made in this city will sincerely hope that better tidings of her will soon come.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

Count the Cost Before You "Burn Ashes."

There were not wanting, even in this city, people who hailed John Ellmore, the Altoona cobbler, whose plan to "burn ashes" has lately received so much attention, as a great public benefactor or discoverer, and elsewhere impulsive people went so far as to plead that he should be compensated for the "priceless" information he had given the world. The fact that scientific men made light of the theory did not discourage some ardent spirits, who maintained that scientific men had been mistaken before, and might be again. But, as The Hamilton Times points out in a thoughtful article, Ellmore's discovery is not new. For many years it has been common knowledge that common salt added to coal would facilitate complete combustion of the carbon; and there have been fuel-saving powders and liquids sold to people who sought to economize, into which salt entered largely and was, in fact the only useful constituent. Rarely, however, did an agent sell a second time to the same person, and the buyer who economized coal in that way always had to pay the price in furnace or stovepipes corroded beyond hope of repair in a single season. The active agent in these fuel economizing compounds, the common salt—sodium chloride—or any other chloride gives free chlorine or muriatic acid gas in the flame, corroding all iron fifty times faster than even "sulphur fumes." The volatilized dust chokes up tubes and the solid clinkers clog the grate. A steam boiler and all the metal touched by the muriatic gas fumes produced would be destroyed very rapidly.

James W. Geyer, a New York cigar manufacturer, claims to have discovered a liquid which enables him to burn three parts of ashes to one of coal, and get a stronger and more lasting heat than from a solid coal fire. His formula is a secret, but he attempts in pseudo-scientific jargon to explain that the ashes are but the vehicle, and that his liquid "releases the oxygen and hydrogen of water at the point of combustion." We fear Mr. Geyer is a fakir or an ignoramus. Eight-ninths by weight of the composition of water is oxygen. What constituent exists the addition of a teaspoonful of which to a pile of ashes soaked with four gallons of water will split up that four gallons of water into eight parts by weight of oxygen and one of hydrogen? The veriest tyro in chemistry knows that to achieve good combustion results something like two volumes of hydrogen are required to one of oxygen. Where does he get the lacking hydrogen? Great care is required in burning these gases in combustion to avert explosions. How does Mr. Geyer guard against them?

The principles of chemistry have not changed. We sometimes make mistakes, it is true, but they are corrected. The foundation facts as to combustion are so simple as to be easily understood; they are demonstrable. Ashes never were burned; never will be burned. When the carbon in a fuel is exhausted there is an end to the use of the substance as fuel. We may add to the ashes material that will burn, or that will liberate gases that will burn, but it will make dear fuel.

What these "discoveries" have done is to recognize that much of our firing is imperfectly done: that a vast lot of unconsumed fuel goes to the dump; and they have schemed to secure such firing as will secure more perfect combustion. Even without the salt or oxalic acid—without any added chemical—the resubjecting of the imperfectly consumed residue of former fires to the flame of fresh coal would secure some results, although it would not give the heat of a clean coal fire. The salt fumes contribute to combustion in a degree, but, as we have pointed out, at the expense of stoves, pipes and chimneys.

Feed your stoves and furnaces properly and sift your ashes. If you do that you need not envy the fellows who burn ashes or seek to apply the oxy-hydrogen blowpipe principle to cooking and heating, and to do it without more chemical equipment than a water pail, a teaspoon, a pile of ashes and a coal shovel.

A Poor Memory.

Horace Britt, who plays the 'cello in the Thomas orchestra, has the reputation of being the champion forgetter of that organization.

This is no slight distinction, for genius and memory for the commonplace things of life, such as umbrellas, and bundles, are not supposed to go together, and the Thomas orchestra is long on genius.

But Mr. Britt is an artist in his forgetfulness. Forgetting to bring home a can of salmon that his wife ordered from the grocery is entirely too commonplace for him. He scorns to remember that he ever had an umbrella. Now and then he does manage to leave his bow at home when he starts down for a rehearsal, and were it not for the fact that his wife jogs his memory every week he might forget to draw his salary. But in the main his forgetting is along lines further removed from the common herd.

On one occasion he dressed carefully for an appearance at an exclusive social function and then appeared on the platform in dress suit, high collar, expansive shirt front and evening tie, all right, but wearing his carpet slippers. He had forgotten to put on his shoes.

On another similar occasion, when the time came for him to appear at a recital he found that he had left his 'cello at home.

But his piece de resistance — that's the way he would say it, for he hasn't been over here from Paris very long—occurred soon after his arrival.

He had been engaged to play at a function where he was peculiarly anxious to make a good appearance. For days he had been anticipating the event, and when the fateful evening arrived he went up to his room to make his toilet with more than usual care.

He divested himself of his old smoking jacket and hung it away carefully in the closet. Then he took off his waistcoat and did likewise. His every-day trousers he folded carefully and laid away.

Here he succumbed to the force of habit. One after another he removed his other garments and put them in their accustomed places for the night. Finally he climbed into his pajamas, turned out the gas and went to bed. He was found, some hours later, by a member of the family, fast asleep. His golden opportunity had gone by.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Literary Notes

THE JUNE DESIGNER.

We note with interest the appearance in the June Designer of stories by Anne O'Hagan and Isabel Gordon Curtis, while the continued sketch, "Economy Farm," by Miles Bradford, the author of "Carlotta and I," still amuses and instructs the young farmer, and interests all who know either more or less than he about farming. But The Designer never forgets its purpose of being a magazine of practical use about the house both for the women and men of the family. It makes no strain after either facts or fiction aimed to startle its readers, but with conservative enterprise, constantly offers articles of every-day use in running the house and the family, and in improving the present condition of both. Many of the summer frocks pictured and described are graceful and pretty beyond the average. The "Graduation Gowns" are seasonable and have the unusual quality of being simple as well as pretty. Mary Kilsyth, a regular contributor to The Designer, has a timely article on the "Verandas of the Day." It helps in a very good work—that of making people who have country houses realize how much comfort and room they are doing without when they have no adequate verandas to step out upon. The Designer for June has endless suggestions that one might begin by using today.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

It is a well-known fact that the Y.M.C.A.'s of America of recent years have done more for the promotion of amateur sport than all other organizations. An effort is therefore being made by the physical department of the local association to inaugurate on the 24th of May a field day, open to all schools, colleges and Y.M.C.A. members and citizens of Belleville. Negotiations are going on for an outside baseball team, a football match and all the various track events. Committees have been appointed and officers of the day elected.

Wrote "Ichabod" on The City Temple.

SENSATION CONCERNING ONE OF LONDON'S LEADING CHURCHES.

London, April 25.—Passers-by were astonished this morning to see the word "Ichabod" (the glory is departed from Israel), in glaring letters, 18 inches high, over the portico of the City Temple. It had evidently been written by a skilled hand as the letters were perfectly formed and spaced. Persons not aware of the significance of the word thought that it was merely a new decoration and passed on.

Eventually somebody sufficiently curious found the Temple caretaker and enquired why the word was on the portico. The caretaker, who until then was not aware of its presence promptly obtained a ladder and washed the letters off.

A subsequent investigation revealed that two well dressed men, with a long ladder, had inscribed the word early in the morning. Nobody interfered with them, it being assumed that they were orthodox Christians, who, saddened by Dr. Campbell's heresy, conceived it to be their duty, to fulfil the invocation of the late pastor of the church, Dr. Parker, who on a memorable occasion declaimed from the pulpit of the Temple: — "Should it ever come to pass that the great truths of Christ's death and resurrection be denied by any future occupier of the pulpit, or should the fact of His gracious Godhead and Divinity be questioned, may the word Ichabod be written over the doors of the City Temple."

A Crossley and Hunter Story.

(Toronto Saturday Night.)

A story comes from one of the outlying districts of the province of a visit from Messrs. Crossley and Hunter, the evangelists, who are of the Methodist persuasion, and who do very active work throughout Ontario. Mr. Hunter who is the more gregarious and active of the pair, makes it his custom to go about and make friends in the towns that he visits. In this case he entered the store of the leading local merchant, and after making a purchase, enquired of the latter, who happened to be a member of the Church of England, his denomination. On being informed he queried:

"But are you a Christian?"

"Yes, I hope I am," was the reply.

"And that young man down there—is he a Christian?"

"That's my son," said the merchant. "you'd better go and ask him yourself."

"Have you any other family?" enquired Mr. Hunter, kindly.

"Yes—I have two daughters."

"And are they Christians?"

"Well, I guess so," said the merchant with a note of offence in his voice.

"And your wife," pursued the evangelist, "I assume, of course, that she too is a Christian."

"Well, you may judge for yourself. You know best. She's a Methodist," was the testy reply.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

An effort is being made, and it will no doubt prove successful, to provide for an afternoon of sport on May 24th. Those who have already taken an interest in the matter contemplate having a five-mile run, for which valuable prizes will be given; sailing races on a course which will be in view from off the park, and a band concert. Already a number of the merchants and others have signified their intention of subscribing funds towards the day's celebration.

As an outcome of the long-distance racing going on, many harriers' clubs are being formed in Ontario. Why not in Belleville?

This will be hockey night in Stratford, Ont., and the former home of Mr. Shakespeare will give final vent to its pent-up enthusiasm. At this season of the year hockey enthusiasm is not epidemic, but when one little city carries off two championships with its own home-grown boys it contracts a feeling that is liable to carry over the summer. That's what Stratford did, and she is proud; so proud that she will not be at peace till her speedy sons are decorated with medals. The decoration will be part of the proceedings to-night.

PECULIAR WILL.

SON OF LATE WILLIAM QUAY MUST NOT ENTER INTO GAMBLING OR LIQUOR BUSINESS.

Toronto, April 24.—Chancellor Boyd gave judgment to-day on the validity of the testamentary restrictions imposed by the late William Quay, of Port Hope, on his son Thomas. The deceased left a fortune valued at over $100,000, which was divided among his children by a will that had been used as a means of placing on record the testator's estimate of the characters of some of the beneficiaries. One son, whose demeanor had not been considered sufficiently dutiful, was laid under the necessity of presenting himself before the executors at Port Hope as a condition of receiving his legacy, the testator evidently considering the trip as a penitential pilgrimage. The restrictions imposed on Thomas, the observance of which had to be demonstrated to the executors, were that he should abstain from both gambling and any trade or business connected with the liquor traffic. The Chancellor rules that the conditions are binding, and that Thomas must furnish evidence periodically to the executors to enjoy the benefits conferred by the will. Should Thomas indulge in gambling for mere pleasure such gambling will not invalidate his claim, as the Chancellor rules that only gambling as a business is prohibited.

Opposed to Divines As Daughters' Husbands

London, April 25. — Mr. Thomas Bevan, of Stone Park, Greenhithe, Kent, who was elected Liberal member for Gravesend in 1880, but unseated on petition, left a will containing some strange clauses.

The document has just been proved and in it Mr. Bevan expressed his earnest, devout and honest hope that none of his daughters or granddaughters would marry a clergyman. He declared his conviction that it was impossible for a man of straightforwardness and ordinary intelligence to make the solemn declaration of ordination which requires him to affirm his belief in the historical accuracy of the book of Genesis, including the account of Noah's Ark and that the writers of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John were more than feeble and fallible.

He further says that the evangelists often "did great injustice to the greatest of men as, when two of them attributed to him the expectation that figs were to be found in Judea before Easter and stated that he cursed a tree because there were no figs in it."

In another clause Mr. Bevan directed that his body should be cremated and that his ashes should be ground to powder and again be burnt if necessary with the addition of a chemical, and dissipated in the air.

A Sensational Incident

Well-known Resident had Eczema 25 Years

Obliged to wear Gloves Day and Night

Zam-Buk Has Worked Complete Cure When 4 Doctors Failed.

ZAM-BUK, the great herbal balm has just worked such a sensational cure in Montreal that it has set the whole city talking. Mr. T. M. Marsh, of 101 Delorimier avenue, is the grateful subject of this cure. He says:

"For 25 years I had Eczema in my hands. It started in red blotches, which itched and burned so that I felt that I could almost scratch the parts away. Then after the itching came the pain and the soreness. Great open wounds formed, and set up terrible agony. I went to a doctor when first the trouble started. He did me no good, and I tried another. He also failed, and I tried a third, and then a fourth. My case baffled them all, and I paid my money for no good. Then I tried embrocations and salves, and liniments, and creams and preparations recommended by druggists and by friends alike. It was no good. The Eczema continued, and I never believed I could be cured. For the past two years the pain and irritation were so bad that I was obliged to wear gloves day and night!

"Zam-Buk was brought to my attention. I tried a little and it did me good. I bought another box and it did still more good. I tried another, and to my intense delight this herbal balm did what I had been hoping for for twenty-five years—it cured me My hands are now healed and I have put away the gloves which for two years had been indispensable day and night. I have been well known in Montreal and Eastern Ontario for over 30 years, and my case is one which hundreds of people know of."

Zam-Buk heals all skin diseases — eczema, scalp sores, ulcers, ringworms, poisoned wounds, barber's rash, pustules, face blemishes due to blood poison. It heals cuts and lacerations, stops bleeding, cures piles, eases fistula, reduces large veins. It cures burns and scalds, and it is an excellent "first aid" remedy. It is highly antiseptic. All druggists and stores sell at 50c a box, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for same price. 6 boxes for $2.50.

Of Interest To Miners And Investers

The North Ontario Reduction & Refining Company, Limited, who are installing a plant for the refining of Cobalt and other ores at Sturgeon Falls, have their buildings, including a laboratory and sampling plant, just about completed, and have contracted for all their machinery, which will be installed as rapidly as possible. They expect to be ready to receive ore some time in June.

This is the first refining plant to be erected in the Province of Ontario, which should enable the Company to secure the bounty offered by the Ontario Government, which amounts to $165,000 a year, this will pay thirty per cent. on the entire capital. In addition to the bounty, enormous profits made by refiners will enable the Company with its low capitalization to pay very large dividends.

We advise you to investigate this proposition. As a bona fide investment it has no equal. Prospectus and full information will be mailed on application to F. ASA HALL & CO., 609 Temple Bldg., Toronto. Members Standard Stock & Mining Exchange, 'Phone Main 2385.

THE BEGGAR'S PLIGHT.

(New York Sun.)

Carnegie gives diplodocuses away.

I met a multimillionaire
As on his way he sped,
And in an excess of despair
I begged a loaf of bread.
"I have no bread just now in store,"
He quickly answered me,
"But here"—and then he handed o'er
A university.
It was a very lovely alms,
And gave me quite a thrill,
But when it comes to hunger's qualms
It hardly filled the bill.

I wandered on another block
And met another wight
Who owns, they say, enough of stock
To hide the moon from sight.
"O give me meat and drink," I cried,
"For charity's sweet sake,"
"I'm not a hotel," he replied,
"But here's a nice fresh lake."
It was a very pleasant pool,
The water fine and clear,
But I am just the sort of fool
Who'd have more use for beer

The night came on. I wandered yet,
My hunger unappeased,
My stomach was prepared to bet
My weasand had been wheezed,
I told my tale of misery,
To one who owns the keys
Of 'Midas' chest—he handed me
Two diplodocuses.
A diplodocus is a bird
Some people think a treat,
But I have all my life preferred
A simpler kind of meat.

And hence it is I advertise
My university;
The little lake I highly prize—
'Tis dainty as can be!
My diplodocuses complete,
Head, vertebrae and tail,
Ribs, shins and funnybones and feet—
They're all of them for sale.
The price and terms are C.O.D.
I'll gladly give the bunch
To any one who'll send to me
One box of solid lunch.

A remarkable incident occurred at a wedding at Scarborough recently, according to the London Express. When the bridesmaids reached the entrance of St. Mary's Parish Church they were informed that they could not enter, as they were not wearing hats, but only wreaths of marguerites. The girls were naturally greatly disappointed, but they got over the difficulty by placing their handkerchiefs on their heads and the marguerites over the handkerchiefs. Then the bridesmaids were allowed in the church and the ceremony proceeded. One of the rules enforced at this church is that women shall not enter bareheaded, and the vicar never makes an exception to the rule.

Children's quickness at deduction by analogy is startling sometimes and sometimes slightly embarrassing, as in the following instance:

"Mamma, I'se got a stomach-ache," said Nellie Bly, six years old.

"That's because you've been without lunch. It's because your stomach is empty. You would feel better if you had something in it."

That afternoon the minister called, and in the course of conversation remarked that he had been suffering all day with a very severe headache.

"That's because it's empty," said Nellie. "You'd feel much better if you had something in it."

Fashion leads to many freaks, and one of them is thus described by the New York Sun: "The very latest in dog leashes is a woman's skirt. A little gold clasp fastened to the bottom of the skirt at one side is snapped into the ring of the dog collar. Two women with dogs attached were in one of the uptown department stores the other day. Apparently the dogs had been broken to the skirt leash, for they trotted along at the side without once getting under the feet of the owner and without getting tangled in the crowd. One of the women had her dog fastened to the bottom of a long coat, and this seemed to be better than the skirt clasp, although she had to keep the coat buttoned. A good many persons who saw the woman wondered what would happen if two of the skirt leashed dogs took a notion to mix it up."

THE ARCTIC OUTLETS.

What Would Happen if These Ice Channels Were Closed.

It is well that there are the water gaps between the continents whose headlands form the boundaries of the Arctic ocean. Through Bering strait, Baffin's bay and the huge opening between Greenland and western Europe thousands of cubic miles of ice are annually discharged which if landlocked would long ago have so accumulated as to have impelled cataclysms that would probably have so swept life from the earth that the evolution of man would have been deferred indefinitely into the far future centuries.

Both poles are located with singular adaptation to ease off the otherwise inevitably too great accumulation of local avoirdupois, which would as surely change the earth's center of gravity as would the hanging of an immense weight at some local point on the periphery of a balance wheel.

It is to this good fortune in present polar locations that the world owes its immunity of cataclysmal inundations and reorganizations which otherwise must have laid down other strata to the mausoleums that mark the resting places of the forms that once sported beneath us.

Sun Spots.

Astronomers have no generally accepted theory as to the cause and nature of sun spots, but some connection with terrestrial phenomena surely exists, because the curves representing the frequency of magnetic storms and of the aurora borealis are practically identical with the curve of sun spot frequency.

A REIGN OF TERROR.

The Kind of Life They Lead In Baku, In Southern Russia.

Henry M. Nevinson, a British newspaper correspondent, writes as follows of present day events in Baku, southern Russia: "'You parasite!' When you open a letter at breakfast and find that written at the top instead of 'Dear sir' or 'My darling love' your attention is immediately drawn to the contents. But here in Baku, if you happen to be the hardworking manager of a rich field with lots of wells yielding some 200,000 pounds of oil apiece every twenty-four hours, you will not be so much surprised. You will know at once what is coming, and your first thought will be a visit to your banker's. 'Our agents,' the letter goes on, 'will call on you tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'clock and you will give them the sum of $750. Should you refuse you will be killed tomorrow or next day. Should you betray our agents or give the smallest hint to the police the whole of your family will share your fate. Signed and sealed on behalf of the committee.' The seal is a rubber stamp in red, sometimes bearing the words, 'Social Democratic Federation,' sometimes 'Anarchist Commune.' The sum demanded varies considerably. I think it is seldom over $1,000, for one must be reasonable in these matters, and usually it is less. I have known a popular and capable English manager to get off with $25, which is a ludicrous exchange for life. But when the agents ring at the door and ask the servant if you are at home and disengaged, the only thing to do is to pay.

"For there is no pretense about the threats. Refusal or betrayal means death without pause, probably within the day. It has been proved over and over again. It was proved last week in the case of a well known and powerful manager who was murdered with revolvers. It was proved the day before yesterday when a Russian manager was disemboweled with knives and lived a horrible time. Anyhow, if you think it worth while to live a little longer here below, you must pay and try to reclaim from the company. Whether the company will ever get anything by reclaiming from the Russian government heaven knows. The government is too busy with the troublesome and expensive task of shooting its political opponents or sending them to Siberia to undertake the protection of commonplace citizens who have no perilous notions about freedom.

"Most conspicuous men employ armed retainers to protect them or avenge their death. Some publish from time to time in the local papers a list of the men who will be at once assassinated if anything happens to themselves. This is thought very efficacious and certainly helps to preserve the peace. I know one manager who boasts he has 200 men in his pay, each pledged to kill some one if the manager is murdered. Pride may have exaggerated the number, but there is no doubt about the system."

A Cigar Store Secret.

Every tobacconist has on his counter a machine for cutting off the ends of cigars. These machines are popular for the reason that they pay for themselves many times over every year.

The ends that smokers cut off are carefully gathered from the counter, and it takes but a few hundred of them to make a pound of good tobacco. This can be sold for 40 or 50 cents.

Some cigar store clerks are very solicitous to see that the patron does not overlook the cutting machine. They push it toward him, and he is much impressed with their politeness. These clerks have for a perquisite the machine's cuttings. This adds several dollars weekly to their salaries.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Australia's Wealth In Sheep.

The greatest industry of Australia is sheep raising, mainly for the sake of the wool, but also in part of course for the meat. Australia now ranks second among the great sheep raising countries, Argentina being first with 92,000,000 sheep, Australia second with 72,000,000 and Russia third with 70,000,000. But a few years ago Australia was first, possessing no less than 106,200,000 head of sheep. That was in 1891. Prolonged droughts were the cause of the destruction of many millions of Australian sheep, but since 1902 there has been an annual gain. Yet these sheep were not indigenous to Australia. They were first introduced in 1797, being of the Spanish merino species.

Platinum Vanishing.

A prominent French writer deplores the vanishing stock of the world's platinum, says the London Globe. All the known deposits are becoming exhausted, and the price is going up to a prohibitive extent. In 1876 the metal could be bought for $100 the kilogram. Four years later it had doubled. In 1901 it had quadrupled, and today the price is $1,200 per kilogram, or twice the price of gold. Even that is for crude platinum. The worked metal is twice as dear again. Considering how many industries are now absolutely dependent on platinum, the question of replacing it by some really efficient alloy or combination is acquiring vital importance.

Aged Golf Players.

One of the great advantages of golf is its suitability as a recreation for the middle aged and the old. A "foursome" was played lately on an English golf course in which the aggregate age of the four players was 331 years. The competitors on one side were eighty-six and eighty years old and on the other side eighty-four and eighty-one. The putting green makes a green old age.

Has Taken a Thousand

Zutoo

Always Cured Headache.

Never Affected her Heart.

Here is a testimonial from the wife of Doctor W. L. Shurtleff, K.C., of Coaticook, Que., who has taken a thousand Zutoo Tablets (the Japanese Vegetable Headache remedy.)

It should convince any doubting one, that while the tablets cure headache, they do not, like the drug cures, affect the heart, nerves or stomach. No one would or could take such a number if they were not perfectly harmless. Mrs. Shurtleff herself had to discard the drug cures. Here is what she says:

I have always been a great sufferer from headache, and have taken a great many headache cures. I found that after taking them for a time they caused palpitation of the heart. Three years ago I began using Zutoo. I have likely taken over a thousand tablets. I have never yet felt the least ill-effect from using them and they cure my headaches as quickly as any remedy I ever took.

They are Harmless as Soda.

Good luck will beat anything in this world.

BY WYMOND CAREY.

Copyright (1905) by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

safe and happy," she smiled with the daintiest irony, "are or will be some of your enemies and mine. My hour has come. I shall not ask them to forgive, nor will they forget."

Had Denise been in the room she would have recalled the words of the girl whom Andre had conducted to the Barrier of St. Louis. This woman was the destiny of France, against whom men fought in vain. As it was, Mont Rouge's letter in his breast pocket seemed to cry out, and Andre shivered. Madame de Pompadour's triumph was complete.

"No, they will not forget," Madame continued, "because they conspired to ruin you, my friend, you to whom Antoinette de Pompadour will always be grateful, for when you might have deserted her and saved yourself you refused. You may not forgive me, but I can punish them, and I will."

Andre impulsively took her hand "Forget my words, Madame," he cried.

"They were forgotten hours ago," she answered softly. "I only remember your oath of loyalty and how nobly you kept it."

It was the vivandiere at Fontenoy who was looking at him now; nay, rather it was the woman the beating of whose heart he had heard on the secret stair. Death alone would silence that beating now.

"See," she said, "you are again the Captain of the Queen's Guards, the King has promised, and you shall be Minister for War. And," she unrolled a sheet of paper, "if you choose, to-morrow in the Galerie des Glaces they shall know that before long you will be Marquis de Beau Sejour as well as Vicomte de Nerac. But neither I nor you can settle that, nor the King, for kings and men alone," she laughed gently, "cannot make a man's fate."

"I thank you, Madame. His Majesty, I hope, will know that I am his servant always, but my decision is already taken, and from to-day I shall not live at Versailles nor Paris; De Nerac is to be my home, and perhaps some day Beau Sejour."

Madame had dropped the roll of paper in an astonishment she failed to master. Her lips parted as she looked him in the face.

"Yes," Andre repeated. "The Marquise de Beau Sejour and I have decided. Nothing can alter that decision."

"Is it because of me?" she asked in a low voice.

"No, Marquise. I had made up my mind before I knew Mademoiselle had made up hers."

Madame endeavoured to penetrate his motives. There were mysteries fascinating to a woman, the wrestlings of the spirit that alter a human soul, to be read in that handsome face so grey, so tried, yet so nobly firm. Madame de Pompadour could discover no more than that a new element, born of spiritual travail in the night that had passed, had entered into Andre's life. What it was, whence it came, and why, baffled her. It is, perhaps, well for women of genius to learn early that there are gifts of the spirit to a few men that it is not for a woman to comprehend, just as there are impulses in a woman that the choicest soul of man must accept by faith in the acts in which they find expression.

"Then your ambitions are gone?" she asked, with that touch of sadness that can quicken sympathy into inspiration. "You are destined to be great and," her eyes pierced the vision of the future, "I desired to help to make you great."

"Madame," he answered simply. "I have achieved my greatest ambition, and I believe I can serve my France better at Beau Sejour than at Versailles."

"And 'No. 101'?" she asked gravely.

"There will be treachery, no doubt, in the future," Andre replied, "there may even be a 'No. 101'; but the 'No. 101' that you and I, Madame, have fought with will not trouble you again."

Madame de Pompadour studied the speaker's face, reflecting on the mysterious confidence in this answer. The riddle was as puzzling to her to-day as it had been at Fontenoy. Andre, she saw, could have told her much; but she also felt he would never tell. And it was not the least of her rare gifts instinctively to recognize when to stop and when to yield. The future was her absorbing care always, and the Vicomte de Nerac would belong to that future.

"You keep your best news to the end," she said with graceful gratitude. "Thanks to you, Vicomte, I hope I have heard the last of 'No. 101.' I shall not forget you at Beau Sejour; do not, in the years to come, think too harshly of me. Good-bye!"

"Adieu, Madame," he raised her fingers to his lips. "Adieu!"

And as the door closed on him she knew, if "No. 101" had defeated her after all, that whatever the past had been, whatever the future might bring, she would never triumph over any man as she had triumphed that morning over Andre de Nerac. Nor would he ever forget the salon of Madame de Pompadour. The spell of a woman's genius once cast on any man touched to the finer issues of human destinies can never be effaced.

But one thing remained, and it was settled in the parlor of "The Cock with the Spurs of Gold," in which the Comtesse des Forges, the Duc de Pontchartrain, and the Comte de Mont Rouge, still a prisoner, unknown to the Court and the King, were waiting for Andre.

They had dimly guessed why they had been summoned, and their bitter fears were confirmed by the sight of Denise, whom Andre had brought with him.

"The Comte de Mont Rouge," Andre began without ceremony, "was arrested last night by myself. The reason will be found in these three letters, copies of which I now give you."

Denise alone was surprised. Andre had been given something at the Barrier of St. Louis after all. The letters proved to have been written by Mont Rouge, the Duke, and the Comtesse.

"If I chose," Andre continued, "all of you three might now be in the Bastile, noble though you be. But the Marquise de Beau Sejour, who has not read those letters, has asked me to spare you because you were once her friends. I have agreed."

"I shall not forget your indulgence, Mademoiselle," the Comtesse burst out, beside herself with vindictive rage.

"Nor will Madame de Pompadour," Andre answered drily. "The originals of those letters are now in her possession in a sealed envelope. She does not yet know what they contain; may I hope you will never make it necessary for her to ask for permission from the Marquise de Beau Sejour to break that seal? You may not find either the King or Madame as indulgent as the lady whom you have wronged."

"Mademoiselle," said the Duke, after a pause, "the pleasantest task for a gentleman in life is to confess to a lady that he has been a fool, when the folly has been inspired by herself. You will give me that pleasure now."

And with his finished smile he had kissed her hand and bowed himself out of the room. Not so Mont Rouge.

"You shall give me satisfaction, Vicomte," he growled sulkily.

Andre looked him all over with a quiet scorn. "Monsieur le Comte," he said, "the Vicomte de Nerac does not cross swords with traitors nor with men who use loaded dice."

Then he took Denise to her carriage and returned.

"And when your sword arm is healed," he added, "two other gentlemen have a prior claim, and I understand they will both insist on it, the Comte des Forges," he bowed to the Comtesse, "and my friend the Vicomte de St. Benoit, whose name you pledged to an English traitor without his knowledge and whom you tricked into being the accomplice of a card-sharper's rascality. I am afraid I shall not have the pleasure of showing you that for such as you the Vicomte de Nerac does not use a sword, but his hunting whip."

Neither he nor Denise altered their decision. To Beau Sejour they went, and at Beau Sejour they remained. Had you visited, as so many travelers then and since have done, the famous chateau, two questions you would certainly have been tempted to ask: To whom had that noble coat of arms in the great hall once belonged, a coat not of the Beau Sejour nor of the De Neracs? And the other would rise to your lips in the crypt of the village church, where amidst the nameless tombs of many who bear the same coat of arms with the same motto lay a single slab. "Francois de St. Amant" is all the name it bears. It has no date, no heraldic symbol to show why it is there, but at the foot are cut the familiar words, "Dieu Le Vengeur." Nor could any one now or since explain why these things were so, nor why beside that simple slab lay for many years another with no inscription on it at all, a tomb waiting, as it were for some one whom death had not yet claimed. To the villagers, happier than any serfs on any demesne in France, these mysteries were simply the will of Madame la Marquise, nor did the curious ever succeed in getting a more satisfying answer.

The villagers were right. It was Denise's act, and Andre, whatever he may have guessed, never asked why, for of certain events in the past both he and she were content with the better part of silence. Friends came to them from Paris and Versailles; they heard of all that was being done at the Court, of the unshaken supremacy of Madame de Pompadour; they lived through the years of hollow truce that followed the war of Fontenoy, through the terrible humiliation of the Seven Years' War that followed the hollow truce, through the sombre and bleak tragedies of misery, disgrace, and starvation, defeat on sea and land for their France. Once only did they go together to Paris, in 1768, to attend the funeral of Queen Marie Leczinska. And once only before then Andre had been summoned alone to Versailles, to say good-bye to the dying Madame de Pompadour, to find her a wasted skeleton, her face a pitiful wreck of the beauty which twenty years before had stormed the privileged citadel of royalty and the noblesse, but a woman in whom the spirit and the wit that had dominated France were unquenched and unquenchable.

Nor did Andre ever again forget that April day with its chilling rain. He stood at the windows of the Palace, where, if you will, you can stand to-day, and watched the cortege that carried the last remains of the Marquise de Pompadour from the Cour d'Honneur into the Place d'Armes and down the Avenue de Paris to the magnificent sepulchre that had been prepared in the Church of the Capuchins in the Place Vendome for the Mistress of France.

To one who had heard the crystal-gazer's prediction, and had lived through these twenty years, there was more than a sermon in the King's heartless comment as he, too, eyed the long procession wind away in the drenching squalls.

"Madame," he said, "has a cold day for her journey." That was all.

And Queen Marie did not exaggerate when she wrote, "She is forgotten as if she had never existed. Such is the way of the world." What a world is this, and how does Fortune banter us! as a greater person than Queen Marie remarked.

When Andre returned to his chateau from that melancholy visit, Denise asked no questions, not even about the new ring he wore, with a crest she knew and the historic motto, "Discret et Fidele." Versailles and Fontenoy alike belonged to a buried past.

Still less had either reason or wish to witness the degradation of the Palace of Louis Quatorze by Madame du Barry, under the grandson for whose death the nation that had once called him "Louis the Well Beloved" now prayed. With the accession of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette they both believed that the night of bankruptcy and shame had at last passed, and death in his mercy took them away before the belief could be shattered, before the silver trumpets of the nobles of the Chevau-legers de la Garde de la Maison du Roi, that had blown for the monarchy of France on so many stricken fields, were silenced by the tumbrils of the Conciergerie for ever. Perhaps they were happier in their ignorance than those whose footsteps to-day so inquisitively mock the proud silence of the Galerie des Glaces, whose voices scare the ghostly echoes in the loneliness of what was once the salon of Madame de Pompadour; for these are reminded at every turn that in the new France, Versailles, once the emblem of a nation's greatness, is now only a museum of pictures; that if it has a history for the French children playing on the terrace it is because it is a tomb of bitter memories, of blood shed not only by the hand of an alien foe, of the disaster that cries out for a nation's revenge, but is not blessed with the heritage of a people's love, still less has the right to ask for a people's tears.

THE END.

Beats Radium For Cost.

If you object to paper money, but wish to carry big values in small compass, you might do worse than lay in a stock of best lenses for microscopes. Weight for weight, gold is not nearly so valuable as glass in the form of powerful lenses, and an ordinary purse filled with such lenses might easily represent a fortune. The record increase in the value of the manufactured article over the raw material is probably made by this variety of glass, which multiplies itself 50,000,000 times. The front lens of a micro objective instrument costing about £1 weighs no more than about .0017 of a gram; hence the value of such lenses to the weight of about two and a quarter pounds would be about £600,000. The cost of making this weight of glass is 1½ pence to 3 pence, and thus when worked up into the shape of a lens the glass has increased in value about 50,000,000 times.—London Express.

A Battle of Butterflies.

"A battle of butterflies," said the Japanese viscount firmly.

"Impossible!" cried the lady on his right.

"Oh," the viscount insisted, "the thing is authenticated. It happened on Aug. 20, 1889. Tales and poems without number have been written on it. On the evening of Aug. 20 two opposing armies of the butterflies fought an aerial battle between Nojima and Kavasaki Mura. The fight continued till sunset, when the smaller army turned and retreated, the victors pursuing it till all were lost in the rosy sunset haze. The ground beneath the combat was thickly strewn with wounded and dead warriors. The battle drew a thousand people. It occurred about thirty feet up in the air. The spectators were amazed and horror stricken to see these gentle blue butterflies grappling and struggling furiously and silently in a blue blizzard above their heads."

The Bookplate.

An ex libris, or bookplate, is a small piece of paper whereon is printed the owner's name and pasted on the inside cover of a book—in other words, it is a printed slip to denote the ownership of books. A proper ex libris should have, first of all, the name, boldly and plainly printed, and a space left for the number of volumes contained in the library; then, to make it more interesting and personal, some decorative device of the owner's peculiar and individual choice as well as some favorite motto, if desired. In Europe those who have the right use family crests or armorial bearings for their ex libris. Every well regulated library should have some mark of ownership, and the ex libris takes the place of the owner's signature.

Moths and Butterflies.

Some moths look very much like butterflies, but there are two ways in which you can always tell the one from the other. Each has little slender feelers growing from the head, but the butterfly's feelers, or antennae, as they are called, have knobs on the ends. The antennae of the moth sometimes have tiny feathers on them and sometimes little spires, but thy are never knobbed. Then, too, in alighting the butterfly always holds her wings erect, while the moth's droop or are nearly flat.

No Longer Worried.

"I thought," said the visitor, "I'd drop in and tell you what your hair restorer did for a friend of mine. When he started to using your elixir there were only a few hairs on his head, but now it's completely covered."

"Indeed?" explained the patent medicine man.

"Yes; by six feet of earth."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Luck and a Woman

...By FRED MEERS...

Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastment

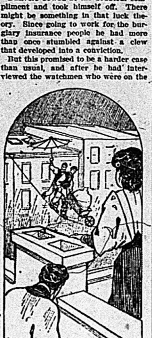
"Close it up soon if you can," said the manager. "We have put some of our best men on the matter, but they can tell us nothing. If we do not manage to locate the cause of these robberies we might as well go out of business."

"I'll do what I can," promised Danvers, "but if Symes and Taylor have given up the case I don't see where I got off."

"Neither do I," admitted the manager frankly, "except that you seem to have fools' luck, and sometimes that is better than good detective instinct."

Danvers bowed at the doubtful compliment and took himself off. There might be something in that luck theory. Since going to work for the burglary insurance people he had more than once stumbled against a clew that developed into a conviction.

But this promised to be a harder case than usual, and after he had interviewed the watchmen who were on the night job and the men who had been working on the case it seemed hopeless.



THE PAIR RETURNED, PUSHING BEFORE THEM A WHEELBARROW.

The burglary insurance included the services of a night watchman and a burglar alarm system. Nothing seemed to be the matter with either of these, and yet the block on Seaton place had been repeatedly robbed.

Of late a special patrolman had been assigned to the block, and all night long be had tramped from one end of the short street to the other. Seaton place was only a block long, a fashionable residence block that offered rich returns to the men who had systematically looted the houses.

None had seen them go in or out, though strict watch had been kept. Once they had even placed a man in each back yard to make certain that no one could enter through the rear, and yet during that week of special precaution three of the houses had been robbed.

The owners were of the ultra English set, who seldom came to town from their country places until after the opera season set in, and already the company stood to lose the better part of its capital in paying off its losses.

Danvers, looking about for a coign of vantage, hit upon a theatrical boarding house at the rear of the block. Here he obtained a rear room, and for several nights he kept vigil. The moon was in its last quarter, and it was not always easy to keep watch, but he sat peering into the dusk, looking to see some one jump the line of fences and attack the houses from the rear. That entrance was effected from the rear he was certain, because the watch from the front was too strict to be evaded.

It was the fifth night that, happening to look up, he perceived a shadow crossing the sky line of the houses. He rubbed his eyes that were drooping with sleep, but he still saw the shadow advancing toward the opposite roof.

"They can't have a flying machine," he muttered to himself. "If they have it's no wonder the boys couldn't locate them. I guess I'll go up on the roof and have a better look."

He stole out of the room and up the stairs to the roof. The trap was left open in pleasant weather to ventilate the stuffy halls, and as he climbed softly through the scuttle hole he almost lost his balance.

Standing on the edge of the roof was a second man, and even as Danvers looked he stepped out over the edge of the roof and glided toward the opposite side.

There was a third figure, a woman's, and Danvers waited a moment to see if she, too, would essay walking upon the air, but she made no effort to follow her companion's example, and at last the detective slipped through the opening and crept softly behind her.

With a bound he was upon her and had clapped his hand over her mouth before she could make outcry. Even in the dim light he could recognize her as one of a trio of acrobats he had noticed at the tables. More than once he had sought to attract her attention, for she was a remarkably pretty girl, but the two men with her resented even a look and kept such close guard over her that there had been no chance to make her acquaintance.

"What are you up to?" he demanded roughly, "I am a detective."

"They thought you were," she gasped as he raised his hand to permit her to reply. "Don't let them catch me, will you? They have gone to rob the houses."

"But how?" he asked curiously. "They seem to walk on air."

"They used to be wire walkers," she explained, "but they tried tumbling afterward. They are walking on the telegraph wires."

"They won't hold up," he scoffed.

"Yes, they will," she persisted. "Over here they have fastened them, and they are strong on the other side. It's easier to walk on a slack wire than on a tight one, you know. This gives just the right sag."

"But how do they bring the stuff back?" he persisted.

"Wait and you will see," she cautioned.

Danvers slipped behind a chimney, and presently the pair returned, pushing before them a wheelbarrow with a grooved wheel. One of them carried a Japanese umbrella painted black, with which he preserved their balance while the other pushed. They dumped their load on the roof and turned back. When they had disappeared down one of the scuttles on the other side Danvers stepped out again.

"How long have you been with these men?" he demanded. "You don't look like their sort."

"They were with a circus," she explained. "I ran away with Jim; that's the smaller one. He watches me so that I do not have a chance to get away from him."

"Is this a regular trick?" he demanded. She shook her head.

"Business is bad this year. The boys can't get work. They were fooling one night on the roof and found that the wire was strong enough to bear them. They used to carry me in the wheelbarrow in the show, and they got the idea of robbing the houses. They cut the alarm wire and can come and go as they please. When the men were watching they walked right over their heads."

"I'd like to get after them," he said. "I could drive them down to the street where the watchman is."

"If you won't tell I'll take you," she volunteered. "Don't be afraid. I can do it."

She caught up another parasol from the roof and spread it. "Ride pickaback," she commanded.

Danvers put his arms about her shoulders, and raised his feet clear. Slowly she adjusted her weight to the wire and began to make her way across. Somewhere he had read that it would not do to look down, so he shut his eyes and hung on.

Once or twice the girl seemed to lose her balance and for a moment worked the parasol violently while she regained it. Then she pressed on again, and at last, with a sigh, she stepped off the wire, and Danvers opened his eyes.

They were on the farther side, and just beyond was the open scuttle.

"Let me go back," pleaded the girl. "They must not know that I helped you or they would kill me when you got out. You must never tell how you made the trip. Pretend that you saw them and climbed a fire escape. I am going to be gone by the time you get back to the house."

"But how can I reward you?" he questioned.

She threw a glance at him.

"I can get a divorce if Jim is convicted. My freedom is a rich reward."

She kissed her hand to him in imitation of the circus ring, and he watched with admiration as her lithe figure sped across the open. Then he dropped through the scuttle.

"Bull luck, I suppose," laughed the manager when Danvers reported the next morning.

"Just that," assented Danvers," "bull luck—and a woman."

But he would not explain the latter part, and the manager imagined it to be the girl he married on the strength of his increased pay.

The First Photography.

It was in 1842 that John Draper, then a professor in the University of New York, made the first portrait photograph. The subject was Elizabeth Draper, his sister. Professor Draper had the idea that in order to produce distinct facial outlines in photography it would be necessary to cover the countenance of the person photographed with flour. This seems a strange notion now, and it proved not to be a good one then, for all of Professor Draper's early attempts were failures. Finally he left off the flour and then was quite successful. This so delighted him that he sent the picture to Sir William Herschel, the eminent English astronomer. Sir William was in turn delighted and made known Professor Draper's success to the scientific men of Europe. He also sent Professor Draper a letter of acknowledgment and congratulation, which has been carefully preserved in the archives of the Draper family.

Testing Eggs For Freshness.

Dissolve two ounces of salt in a pint of water and then place the egg to be tested in this liquid. A new laid egg will at once sink to the bottom; an egg three days old will remain suspended about midway, and an egg that is five days old or more will float on the top of the solution. The vacuum in the shell is the explanation of the varying actions of the egg. The larger it becomes owing to the evaporation of the contents through the shell the more easily the egg floats.

NATURE PROVIDES FOR SICK WOMEN

a more potent remedy in the roots and herbs of the field than was ever produced from drugs.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers few drugs were used in medicines and Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., in her study of roots and herbs and their power over disease discovered and gave to the women of the world a remedy for their peculiar ills more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

is an honest, tried and true remedy of unquestionable therapeutic value.

During its record of more than thirty years, its long list of actual cures of those serious ills peculiar to women, entitles Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to the respect and confidence of every fair minded person and every thinking woman.

When women are troubled with irregular or painful functions, weakness, displacements, ulceration or inflammation, backache, flatulency, general debility, indigestion or nervous prostration, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

No other remedy in the country has such a record of cures of female ills, and thousands of women residing in every part of the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable compound and what it has done for them.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. For twenty-five years she has been advising sick women free of charge. She is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and as her assistant for years before her decease advised under her immediate direction. Address, Lynn, Mass.

A Lost Play.

Weedon Grossmith, the English comedian, used to tell a good story about a play by Robert Ganthony, which that gentleman asked him to read. Mr. Grossmith took the comedy, but lost it on his way home. "Night after night," he says, "I would meet Ganthony, and he would ask me how I liked his play. It was awful. The perspiration used to come out on my forehead as I'd say sometimes, 'I haven't had time to look at it yet,' or, again, 'The first act was good, but I can't stop to explain, etc., must catch a train.' That play was the bane of my existence and haunted even my dreams." Some months passed, and Ganthony, who is a merry wag, still pursued him without mercy. At last it occurred to Mr. Grossmith that he might have left the comedy in the cab on the night it was given to him. He went down to Scotland Yard and inquired. "Oh, yes," was the reply. "Play marked with Mr. Ganthony's name sent back to the owner four months ago, as soon as found."

Ants That Kill Snakes.

That ants can actually kill snakes is a hard thing to believe. There is irrefutable evidence, however, that they do, and scientists have discovered that the snake has hardly a more dangerous enemy. The large, red-brown forest ant is the sort that is the most fatal to the ophidians, and a curious thing about the attack of these tiny creatures on this comparatively enormous reptile is that they kill it for food and not on account of any natural antipathy. When some of the ants catch sight of a snake they arouse the whole community at once. In companies and battalions the little fellows set upon the reptile, striking their nippers into his body and eyes at a thousand points at once. So rapidly and concertedly is this done that the snake has no chance at all of escaping. It soon becomes exhausted and dies ignominiously. Then the ants set harder still to work. This may seem a strange story, but it is true. They begin to tear off the flesh in small pieces, gradually stripping off the skin and working inside it.

The Secret.

He—Why did you tell me this if it was such a secret? She—But if I didn't tell it to somebody how could anybody know I could keep a secret?—Baltimore American.

A well known American actor, who is old enough not to consider himself a matinee idol by any means, was somewhat surprised and pleased in a St. Louis hotel a short time ago when a pretty girl stopped him in the corridor and presented him with a rose without saying a word. He was more surprised and less pleased to receive a note the following day reminding him of the incident and asking him to send the giver of the flower two seats at the theater in which he was playing "as a memento of the occasion."

"My dear young lady," the actor replied, waxing sarcastic as he realized what had been the object of the attention he had been paid, "I would be glad to send you the seats you ask for, but, on consultation with the manager of the theater, I have been informed that the seats are all fastened down and that he is opposed to having them sent away as souvenirs in any event, so that you will have to be contented with an autograph for a souvenir of your benevolence of yesterday instead."—Harper's Weekly.

On one occasion, so the legend goes, St. Columba blessed a knife so that it never could hurt any creature afterward. His blessing produced exactly the opposite effect on the stake. A very poor peasant brought it at the saint's bidding. St. Columba sharpened it with his own hand and then blessed it. "Keep it," he said. "It will hurt neither man nor beast, only wild animals and fish. So long as you keep it you will never lack flesh food." The peasant fastened it in the ground and the very next day found a very fine stag impaled. Not a day passed without some wild creature being thus captured. The wife was frightened. "Some one will get hurt," she said. "Then we shall be either killed or sold as slaves." The peasant removed it and laid it by in his house. The next day his dog was killed by it. He put it in the river and found a marvelously big salmon on it. The next place was on the roof, where it proved fatal to a crow. Persuaded by his wife—"per sociam, ut Adam," says the biographer—he cut it up and burned it and was as poor as ever all the rest of his life.—London Spectator.

Whiskers as Toothpicks.

Nature has armed the walrus with a growth of whiskers which extend three or four inches from its snout, with the apparent motive of enabling it to detect the presence of an iceberg before actual contact has resulted. These whiskers are quite stiff, and this quality improves with age. When a walrus is killed the natives proceed to pull out, with the aid of rude pinchers, each separate whisker. After a thorough drying they are arranged in neat packages and exported to China for use as toothpicks.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Handy Little Conveniences That Oil the Domestic Machinery.

One of the greatest conveniences of the kitchen sink is a piece of pumice stone. It may be bought wherever painters' supplies are sold or usually in a drug store, a large piece costing only a few cents. Get the irregular rough stone, not the polished down toil variety.

Every cooking utensil may be cleaned with it, and its irregular form makes it reach the most inaccessible corners of every dish. In using it you will find that it soon shapes itself, if it is not already quite satisfactory, as the rubbing works it off to fit wherever it is most needed. It does not work as well when new because of its irregular surface, but this soon disappears. Kettles which have been burned black, as they will be sometimes, are restored by pumice stone to their pristine smoothness and polish. No chain dishcloth ever can approach it, and one who tries it will never be without it again. A piece lasts a long time.

When a kettle threatens to boil over grease the rim lightly all around with a bit of butter. The contents will touch this danger line, but will not pass it. Stewpans in which vegetables are boiling may be treated in the same way.

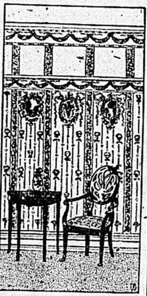
To clean dainty table covers or silk rub magnesia on the soiled spots and put away for a few days. Put plenty on both sides. When wanted for use again brush well, and the spots will be gone.

To wash woolen blankets dissolve soap enough to make a good suds in boiling water and add a tablespoonful of aqua ammonia. When scalding hot turn over your blankets. If convenient use a pounder or any way to work thoroughly through the suds without rubbing on a board. Rinse well in hot water. There is usually soap enough from the first suds to make the second soft. If not add a little soap and ammonia and after being put through a wringer let two persons, standing opposite, pull them into shape. Dry in the sun. White flannels may be washed in the same way without shrinking.

A NEW WALL PAPER.

Effective Stripes Headed by a Framed Medallion.

The Georgian paper illustrated is quite a new departure in wall papers, although the style is an excellent sample of the period it represents. The great feature is that the design is entirely outline; there is no "mass" or space of color or tone. Some of the outline is in burnt sienna and some in a rather dark blue arranged so as to form interesting stripes, headed by a framed medallion, and herein is to be found one of the special features of the wall covering, for it is possible to introduce in these oval spaces various hand colored views or anything else suitable which the individual taste of the owner suggests, or the medallions can be left, as there is already a design printed on them. The paper itself is an ivory colored silk fiber and forms an excellent background to the mahogany furniture so much in vogue during the reigns of the Georges.



A GEORGIAN STYLE OF PAPER.

A Woman's Smile.

It is just as easy to face the world and its people with a smile as with a frown. The cheery woman finds that she can be a comfort to others and do good service in various helpful ways, social, personal and charitable. Mothers soon learn that she is one of their faithful aids. The little children love her, as she enters into their amusements and sympathizes with their small griefs. Young men and maidens confide their petty secrets to her discretion, and older people enjoy the delicate attentions she delights to bestow.

Sleep While You Can.

Some have the gift of sleep, and others haven't.

The secret of more than one notable instance of beautiful mothers and grandmothers is acknowledged to be due directly to the power of sleep, to take a quiet little nap at any time of the day when a busy afternoon or long evening is before them.

It really seems, then, one of the cleverest attainments open to the eternal feminine, this capacity of capturing forty winks whenever she pleases.

LOVE ADDED A GROUP.

How Pitcairn Island Became a British Possession.

There recently died in a London workhouse infirmary, poor and forgotten, a man whose one-time attachment to a young and high-spirited girl had the result of adding a whole group of islands to the British Empire.

John Strachan, the individual in question, was one of the pioneer Australian gold-miners; and having "made his pile" he went to Melbourne —as was the well-nigh universal practice amongst the "diggers" in those days—in order to spend it. There he fell in love with Lily Ambrose, the pretty daughter of a well-to-do innkeeper. He would have married her forthwith, but her parents objected, whereupon he and she set sail for the Southern Seas in a forty-foot cutter, and eventually settled on what is now known as Marion Island.

Constituted "Effective Occupation."

Here they lived many years and begot sons and daughters, and this was held to constitute "effective occupation," when, some time afterwards, the question of the ownership of the Crozet and adjacent groups (to one of which Marion Island belongs) was raised in a semi-acute form between the Governments of France and Britain.

Pitcairn Island became an appanage of the British Crown after a somewhat similar fashion. One John Adams, a mutinous sailor belonging to the Bounty man-of-war, ran away from Tahiti with the wife of a local chief, and others of his messmates followed his example. Together they sailed into the unknown, until they sighted "an island mountain that rose like a great sugar-loaf out of the sea," and thereon they settled, burning their ship after having looted her of all available stores. The mutineers remained unknown in England until 1814, when the island was accidentally rediscovered. The Union Jack was then hoisted, but it was not until 1839 that Pitcairn was formally annexed.

KING EDWARD A BARGAIN.

British Monarchy Maintained by Revenue From Nation's Land.

Prof. Masterman, of Birmingham, has pointed out that we get our monarch at considerably under cost price.

About a hundred years ago, the Crown lands, which then formed the chief source of revenue, were taken over by the nation, and they now bring in rather more than it costs the country to maintain the monarchy.

As to the curious maxim in English law that "the King can do no wrong," Prof. Masterman explains that this means that the law courts can take no cognizance of what the King does, but politically every action of the King must be sanctioned by some person who can do wrong, and who can be punished for doing wrong. The King has to act through certain definite channels, and the whole of English constitutional history lies round the contest to limit those channels.

The position of the English King of to-day differs from that of the past in the substitution of influence for authority.

Devil-Bird of Ceylon.

Most people who have visited the Island of Ceylon and penetrated into the jungle fastnesses, have heard the cry of the devil bird. This awe-inspiring sound resembles nothing so much as the screams of a human being undergoing the most terrible torture. Naturalists have identified it with the brown wood owl found in Hindustan.

But the devil bird, or ulama, as the Cingalese call it, is an elusive creature, and no one has had the good fortune to kill or catch a specimen. The Cingalese—naturally a superstitious race—regard the cry of this bird with the utmost horror; they believe that its scream heard at night presages the most dire misfortune, and they are in the habit of offering sacrifices to avert the approaching disaster.

Mr. Milford, of the Ceylon civil service, studied the mysterious bird with great interest. "Its ordinary note," he writes, "is a magnificent, clear shout, like that of a human being, which can be heard at a great distance, and has a fine effect in the silence of the closing night. But the sounds which have earned for it its bad name, and which I have heard but once to perfection, are indescribable, the most appalling that can be imagined, and scarcely to be heard without shuddering. I can only compare it to a boy in torture, whose screams are being stopped by being strangled."

Find of Rare Diamonds.

Extraordinary fine diamonds have been discovered in a new mine in the Orange River Colony, South Africa, within the last few weeks. Experts are astonished and delighted at the quality and purity of the stones. The mine in question is called the Robert Victor Mine, and is situated at Boshoff, a few miles across the border from Kimberley. It is only a comparatively small property, less in extent than any of the known mines comprising the DeBeers group. But the stones are not only of quite superfine quality, equally the best Brazilian diamonds, and far better than anything hitherto found in South Africa, but they are also very plentiful. The DeBeers average is roughly a quarter of a carat per load. The average of the Premier, in the Transvaal, near Pretoria, is about a third of a carat per load, but the Robert Victor is said to work out at nearly three-quarters of a carat per load—an extraordinary and hitherto unattained result.

Australia and Canada.

"When one compares what Australia is doing with the remarkable record of Canada, the Australian accomplishment seems puny enough. Canada accommodated 100,000 new-comers last year, and is now offering work to men, 10,000 at a time, for railway construction and similar purposes. Where Australia must insist on conditions, Canada invites the healthy white practically without reservation."

The Inevitable Man

By IZOLA FORRESTER

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

"Wait," laughed Jolly Allan, prophetically wagging his forefinger at the two figures in the hammock. "Just you girls wait until the inevitable man shows up and see where your friendship will be. Pouf! Bing! Up in smoke."

"There have been men"— began Irene loftily.

"I said the inevitable man," protested Jolly—"the man, the right and only one. I know there have been; wasn't I one of them last year? But, honest, it will do me a world of good to see the right one come along and have both of you girls fall in love with him—your tastes are so similar, you know." He dodged the cushion that whizzed from the hammock in his direction dexterously. "And then see the tumble in girl loyalty. You won't speak to each other, and every time the other one goes by with the inevitable man the one that's frozen out will say, 'Cat.'"

"Jolly, there is a limit, you know, even to your imagination." Dorothy Arnold rose from the hammock and stood a moment, her arms upraised as she fastened in some refractory hairpins. They were pretty arms, plump, tanned and bare to the elbows. So was their owner pretty—the very prettiest girl at Northern Lights except one, and that one her closest friend, Irene Nethersby.

It was nearly a month since the two girls had come to the inn at Northern Lights to spend their summer vacation. The "Lights" was not a fashionable resort, strictly speaking; its guests and their doings were not chronicled in the Sunday papers, but to those who knew and loved it it had beauties far beyond Newport or Atlantic City. Perched high on the pine crested bluff overlooking the sea was the inn. Winding woodland paths led to it from the shore, and back in the hills were trout brooks and deep glens. Long before the inn and its satellite cottages had been there the lighthouse had held its own upon the rocks of the bluff, and it was the light from its lamps which had given the north point of Shelter Island its name, Northern Lights.

It was an odd summer crowd that filled the inn—students resting, students studying, people in search of peace above all—and yet about these steady guests, who came year in and year out, there played perpetually the transient, merry summer butterflies, who came and went with the weekly steamer.

Jolly Allan was a permanent fixture. As son of the owner of Northern Lights at large he occupied a privileged position. But even with Dorothy's dark eyes gazing at him in haughty disapproval he did not retract one word.

"Just wait," he said. "Last year he didn't come, but he will this time."

Arm in arm the two girls walked leisurely down one of the cliff paths that led to the boat landing. Both were tall, both slender and golden haired as sisters, but Dorothy's eyes were dark and grave, and Irene's were blue as the bluebells that grew in the rock crannies at her feet. They were cousins and college mates as well. Every year only drew them nearer together and made their friendship more sure, and with all their little love affairs there had never been a shadow of rivalry.

Halfway down the bluff the path made a turn, and a rustic bench had been built there. Kneeling on it, the girls leaned their elbows on the back and watched the White Queen steam smoothly to the dock and disembark her usual quota of city deserters.

It was sunset, and the sea lay silent and rippleless, stained crimson and purple from the sun's rays. Most of the passengers were taking the main road up to the inn. Only one figure came toward them, a figure in gray flannel, and as he came he whistled. The girls watched him idly, disinterestedly, without moving from their position. Men were common at the "Lights," even men in gray flannels who whistled. But as he came up the path and faced them at the turn they realized that this man was different. It wasn't anything special about him—he was merely a strapping, healthy youngster, clear eyed, clean shaven, with lips ready to whistle or smile and brown hair that waved above his tanned forehead—but it was the quick, frankly astonished look in his eyes that disarmed them as he glanced from one face to the other, a look that spoke volumes, but volumes with a double dedication.

"Is this the right way to the inn?" he asked.

Dorothy did not answer. After that first look in the stranger's eyes she had looked out at the crimson sea. Irene flushed slowly and pointed up the path.

"It is up there where the gray towers are," she said, and he lifted his gray traveling cap and went on, but he did not whistle.

For a few minutes neither girl spoke. Then Irene sighed, half to herself, and slipped her arm around her cousin's waist.

"Dolly, wouldn't it be odd if he were the one? You know what Jolly said—the inevitable man."

And Dorothy pushed back her hair with a quick, half impatient gesture as she turned from the sea.

"It is late," she said. "Yes, it would be odd if he were the one."

As Jolly said a week later, he was it all right. And gradually Jolly's smile deepened, and he went about with hands in his white duck pockets, wo ing a mystical look of wisdom beyo mortal ken, for his prophecy was co ing true.

Dudley Graham was the strange name. Jolly exulted in it. It could have been better. And when, after couple of days, Dudley showed hims possessed of an unlimited "wad" boot and a disposition to scatter Jolly's admiration changed to respe and he hoped Dudley's choice wou fall on Dorothy, because for himself always had preferred blue eyes.

But Dudley apparently had no choic The cousins were the prettiest girls the "Lights." Therefore he made lov to both of them with absolute impa tiality. And he was an artist at lov making—no ordinary piazza moonin or woodland strolls, but at daybreak when all the world lay in a bridal ve of pearl and diamond, he would tak the girls out for a sail or send the up great clusters of forest flowers t say good morning for him.

"Which one?" asked Jolly, and ever one at the "Lights" echoed the que tion. Perhaps no one thought it ofte er than the girls themselves. Gradual ly they drew apart. There was n open quarrel, nothing to gossip over but all the old sweet comradeship wa broken, and except when Dudley wa with them they walked and lived alone.

To Dorothy it was a wonderful thing this strange new love, something no to be breathed of, and yet her eye never met Graham's that she did no feel vaguely sorry for Irene. And Irene, winsome, gay hearted, was oddly quiet and restrained these days and, hearing Graham's voice in her ears as they two bent over the dipping sail, she felt her heart ache for poor Dorothy.

And then, as Jolly called it ever after, there came the day of decision. It was a gray day, threatening, squally, bringing with it a premature tang of September chill. Graham was going out in his yacht, the Lorelle. As he came down the steps of the piazza Dorothy joined him, tall and slender, in her rain coat and hatless.

Graham hesitated and glanced to where Irene stood.

"Afraid?" he asked laughingly, and she took the challenge, not because of his words, but because of Dorothy and her silence.

"There's a storm coming," called Jolly. "I'll get the life savers ready to go out after you."

It was only a jest, and half an hour later Jolly, in his big hearted, rough way, would have given all he owned to call it back, for out on the gray sea the little white winged yacht swirled and dipped as the storm swept down on it, and when the darkness had lifted there was a cry from those watching from the inn, and down at the little white life saving station below the lighthouse they were pushing out the lifeboat.

Keel up the Lorelle drifted, but before the lifeboat reached it they found a figure swimming for shore, a hearty, strong, athletic youngster, one Dudley Graham, who had kept his presence of mind and resolved to save said Dudley Graham's precious life at all hazards.

"Go ahead," called Tom Hardy, the captain of the crew to him. "Go ahead; you're doing finely. Keep it up. We wouldn't stop you for the world."

And they left him swimming for shore and made straight for the overturned yacht, where two girls held each other above the peril of the sea.

"Take Irene first," said Dorothy.

"Dolly first," gasped Irene as Tom lifted her into the boat.

The next morning Jolly sat on the piazza smiling buoyantly to two figures in the hammock.

"He went on the early boat," he said blithely. "Congratulations. But was not he a really lovely specimen? For fair weather, I mean. Wasn't he"—

"Jolly," interposed Dorothy, "even the inevitable can be postponed, can't it? We—Irene and I—have decided that our inevitable man must be twins."

A Floral Freak.

There is a singular floral freak called the "occasional" flower for the reason that it has no particular time to bloom. It is said that when closed the occasional flower is in color and form something like a ripe poppy head, but with the stem attached. Submerged in a bowl of water for a few minutes and then taken out and placed by its stem in an empty bottle, the outer petals begin in several minutes to open out. This process is slow, but distinctly noticeable. The petals continue to rise and to expand until they gradually recede. When this action is completed it resembles in appearance the sunflower. The occasional flower remains thus open for a few hours, during which time, the state of humidity lessening by degrees, the fiber begins to shrink and the petals close up gradually in the same way that they opened until the flower resumes its former position. It is said that, properly nourished, with regard to temperature and air, and carefully handled, the occasional flower never decays or degenerates in its radiance and splendor.

Elements of Pathos.

"Don't you think there is pathos in the death of summer, the falling of the leaf, the flight of the birds, the"—

"Pathos? Sure thing. Why, I just looked over my last winter's underclothes, and there isn't a single garment fit to wear."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Surfeited Cynic.

"Remember," said the melodramatic man, "there are things in this life that money cannot buy."

"Yes," answered the impecunious person wearily, "but I had enough of them long ago. What I want now is a change."—Washington Star.

MYOPIA OF THE EYE.

Myopia is the same as near sightedness. When an eye is myopic or near sighted, the image of the object looked at does not focus on the optic nerve; the focus is in front of the nerve, the eyeball is too long, and as we cannot change the shape of the eyeball, we do the next best thing and put in front of it a concave lens, which results in the focus being thrown back to the nerve. Myopic persons hold their reading too close to their eyes, and objects at a distance are very blurred or misty. Vision is certainly the most important of the senses, and therefore a word to the wise should suffice. Visit my office and learn about correcting imperfect vision.

Marmora Now Has Oddfellows' Lodge.

One of the most enthusiastic gatherings held in Marmora in a long while took place on Wednesday evening. It being the occasion of the organizing of a Lodge of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, says the Marmora Herald. A large number of visitors from neighboring lodges in Madoc, Havelock, Stirling, Peterboro and other points were present, the Foresters' Hall where the meeting was held, being filled to its utmost capacity.

Col. Johnston, of Toronto, Grand Master of the I.O.O.F. for Ontario, was present, and degree teams from Peterboro which came over by special train for the purpose, duly initiated the candidates into the mysteries of the order and put them through their various degrees. About thirty new candidates were received, which together with a number of residents of the village who were already members of the society, brings the membership of the new lodge up to thirty-seven, and it is expected that a number of other names will be added to the list in the near future.

The new Lodge will be known as Mystic Lodge, No. 378 and the officers for ensuing term were duly elected as follows; Noble Grand, O. P. Butler, Vice Grand, F. S. Pearce; Financial Secretary, Wm. Williams; Treasurer, F. N. Marrett. Mr. W. H. Hubbell, who held the office of Noble Grand in another Lodge was appointed to the office of Past Grand of the new lodge and the subordinate officers will be installed by Mr. Patterson, of Havelock, assisted by the district Executive.

After the installation of officers a number of short addresses were given by Col. Johnston, Grand Master of the Order; Col. Miller, of Peterboro; J. A. Tully, of Peterboro; Mr. W. F. Sine, of Sine; Rev. A. L. Brown and the newly-elected Noble Grand and Vice Grand. This was followed by a supper in the town hall at which an ample supply of good things was provided and the gathering broke up highly enthusiastic over the night's work.

At the close of the regular choir practise of St. Andrew's Church, last night, a pleasing presentation was made to a popular member of the choir who is soon to leave the city, Mr. Chris Pratt, an employee of the G.T.R., is to be moved further east by the Railway company, and in future his headquarters will be at Ottawa. Last night, at the conclusion of the choir practise he was presented with a signet ring and many good wishes by his fellow-choristers, the presentation being made by little Marguerite Brown. Newspaper Postage To United States

MATTER DISCUSSED IN SENATE—MAY WORK HARDSHIP ON CANADIAN WEEKLIES.

Ottawa, April 24. — In the Senate this morning Senator Ellis moved for correspondence respecting the increased postage on newspapers to the United States. The Postmaster-General had announced in the Commons that hereafter the minimum rate on Canadian newspapers sent from Canada to the United States, would be a cent a package. This imposed a heavy burden on the press of Canada, and particularly of the weekly press. There were many of these published in Canada, and some of them while called weeklies, were published twice. A considerable proportion of their issue was sent to the United States to persons who had been in Canada, and in this way kept in touch year after year with the land of their birth and their old friends.

The good which resulted from continuing this connection between Canada and Canadians in the U. S. was seen in the 'Old Home Weeks' which were held each year in many cities and towns of Canada. The annual subscription to Canadian weeklies and semi-weeklies was almost always a dollar a year.

With the new postal rates the weekly newspapers would have to pay 52 cents and the semi-weekly $1.04 a year postage on each subscription. That would be a falling off in the number of papers going to the United States.

He doubted if the increase in the postal rates were in the best interests of Canada.

A Pleasant Event.

A pleasant event took place at the close of the choir practice in the Tabernacle Church last evening when Mr. Sam Turner and his bride were presented with a magnificent shower bouquet of roses, as a slight token of esteem, in which they (as members of the choir) are held. After appropriate speeches were made and songs sung, a dainty lunch was served by some of the ladies of the choir, which brought the merry evening to a close.

The ideal of perfection is always kept in sight in the manufacturing of this famous instrument. The reason that the celebrated pianists insist on having this piano is that the widest range and volume of tone are characteristic of it.

Steamer May Be Total Wreck.

Halifax, N.S., April 26.—The Norwegian tramp whaleback steamship Universe, 2,300 tons, from New York in ballast, for Montreal via Louisburg, went ashore at 2 o'clock yesterday morning at Seal Cove Head, Dover Bay, six miles from Canso. The captain, officers and crew, 23 in number, were saved and are now at Canso. The vessel is full of water and will probably be a total wreck. A dense fog prevailed at the time of the accident.

Grand Trunk Employe Killed.

Cobalt, April 26.—F. J. Neff, a Grand Trunk Railway employe, from Black Rock, New York State, was killed at Haileybury yesterday afternoon, while trying to board a freight passing through Haileybury at a rate of six miles an hour.

He fell between two cars, and his head was cut off. Deceased was about forty years of age. The body will be sent to Black Rock for burial.

Miner's Treasurer Decamps.

Sydney, N. S., April 26.—The local police have sent circulars throughout the Dominion, asking for the arrest of John C. McNeil, treasurer of the Miners' relief fund.

McNeil disappeared some time ago, and an examination of his books showed a shortage of $1,000.

Fire In Convent.

Quebec, April 26.—Fire did considerable damage to the second floor of the Bon Pasteur Convent early yesterday morning.

THE HOTEL CLERK.

According to This View His Lot Is Not a Happy One.

Who is the most envied and bediamonded among men? The hotel clerk. Who runs away with our heiresses? The hotel clerk. Who gets the straightest tips on the stock market? The hotel clerk. Whose pride goeth not before destruction and whose glory is never dimmed? The hotel clerk's. So runs the accepted catechism.

Now a truth seeker in Chicago rises to say that the average hotel clerk's chance in life is a trifle less than nothing. He can't marry, for he is compelled to live in the hotel, and his wages won't pay his wife's board. Even as a bachelor he finds it hard to save money. When he reaches the age limit—not a high one—he is displaced by a young man.

There are then three things for him. He may become night clerk in a country hotel, a job that he rose from years before; he may be put in charge of a cloakroom and look to tips for most of his pay or he may try to get other work, using up his savings meanwhile, and end his life in the almshouse. Not a cheering conception and practically useless to the humorist.

KEEP YOURSELF YOUNG.

Exercise Every Day Even Though You Steal the Time to Do It.

It is futile to try to lay down general age limits for the different kinds of athletic sports.

The limits vary individually within very wide marks, and if observations made on a number of individuals of the present generation put them very low this does not mean that they would be the true and desirable limits if we had a generation whose physical education from the beginning had been undertaken and carried out upon a plan only one-fourth or even one-tenth as elaborate as the plan for its mental education, not only as far as exercise and sport are concerned, but also in regard to eating, drinking, clothing, sleeping, pleasures, stimulants, etc., and whose individuals were willing to continue to live upon a similar plan after growing out of the hands of their educators.

Live a simple, natural life, take strenuous exercise every day of your life, even should you steal the time to do so, and see what will become of your personal limit for the various kinds of sports.

Indian Punishment.

Some idea of what Baroda, India, was in times comparatively recent may be gathered from the following: A hundred elephants were kept at the expense of the state, and criminals were executed in a most horrible manner. The poor wretch, tied hand and foot, was fastened by a long rope round the waist to the elephant's hind leg. Then the animal was made to trot through the city, and the man, at almost every step rebounding against stones and obstacles, soon became a mass of bruises and wounds and a ghastly spectacle. If he survived this, his head was placed on a block, and the elephant crushed it with his foot.—Exchange.

McINTOSH BROS.

TO KEEP BRITISHERS

Emigrants to Be Encouraged to Proceed to the Colonies.

Resolution Passed by Conference In Favor of Keeping Them Within the Empire—Question of Divorce Laws Also Discussed—Canada Was Silent Capital Is Wanted — Naturalization Laws—Child Emigration.

London, April 26.—(C. A. P.)—The following resolution proposed by the Commonwealth Government passed the Imperial Conference yesterday, that it is desirable to encourage British emigrants to proceed to the colonies than to foreign countries and that the Imperial Government be requested to co-operate with any colonies desiring immigrants in assisting suitable persons to emigrate. Premier Deakin dwelt on the urgent need for increased emigration to Australia.

Premier Ward said what New Zealand wanted was emigrants with some capital.

According to official precis Canada took no part in the discussion.

John Burns explained that the Government were considering how far they could adopt the report of the inter-departmental committee, one of whose recommendations was the reorganization of the immigrant information office.

The Government could not exercise any preference between colonies; all they could do was to furnish most of the reliable information possible and leave the intending emigrant to make his own selection. He did not believe in colonization by bodies. Persons thought the present a good opportunity for the colonies to obtain useful artizan colonists, especially in the building trade, and laid stress on the extreme value of child emigration on the lines followed by the late Dr. Barnardo, and welcomed any practical suggestion on the question of uniformity naturalization laws throughout the Empire.

Herbert Gladstone made an explanatory statement respecting the draft of the Imperial naturalization bill, which is before the conference, and spoke regarding the divorce law prevailing in the different colonies on this question. In view of the number of detailed considerations involved it was agreed that the discussion be adjourned.

A LITTLE TOO HASTY.

Plaintiff Settled Case For Less Than Jury Would Have Given.

St. Thomas, Ont., April 26.—At the Spring Assizes before Mr. Justice Anglin and jury the case of Charles Patterson, of Toronto Junction, C.P.R. fireman, who was so terribly scalded and injured in the wreck on Wabash diamond, east of this city, has occupied several days. A great array of expert medical evidence was given by Toronto and London physicians as to permanent extent of Patterson's injuries, who asked $20,000 damages from the Wabash. The jury had been out for four hours when the plaintiff, whose solicitor was out on another case, and without his advice, decided to settle with the Wabash solicitor for $3,400 and pay his own physician's bill, the Wabash to pay all other costs.

It was learned afterwards that the jury had about decided to give plaintiff a verdict of between $7,000 and $8,000 for injuries received.

PLOT TO KILL PRINCE.

Anarchist Found Hiding In Confessional Box, and Arrested.

Brussels, April 26.—An anarchist, armed with a dagger, a loaded revolver and other weapons, was arrested yesterday in a church where Prince Albert of Belgium, nephew of King Leopold, and heir presumptive to the throne, was about to visit.

One of the attendants of the church accidentally discovered the man hidden in a confessional box, locked the door and called the police.

Later three other anarchists, similarly armed, were arrested in the vicinity of the church. Two of the latter admitted that they were French anarchists.

The authorities are convinced that the prisoners were engaged in a plot to assassinate the Prince.

Breaks Smallpox Quarantine.

Windsor, April 26.—Crown Attorney Rodd has been notified by Edward Price, health officer for Maidstone Township, that several people near Elmstead, who were quarantined for smallpox, have refused to comply with the regulations and are mingling with their neighbors.

He has been instructed by the crown attorney to use his authority, by which he may have the offenders locked up and guarded by constables.

Alleged Highwayman In Jail.

Peterboro, April 26.—William McGee was arrested yesterday on a charge of attempting to hold up his Majesty's mail Wednesday morning. James Reid, the mailcarrier, was returning from the station with the midnight mail, when he was stopped and ordered to hand over the mail bags. Reid, however, hit the man twice on the head with an empty mail bag and was allowed to go on.

Crown Counsel Withdraws.

HOT LARD IN STREAMS

Half a Million Pounds Run From Burning Building.

Fireproof Warehouse Suddenly Turned Into Seething Furnace — Allegheny Firemen Cope With Big Blaze In Big Packing Plant—Ammonia Tanks Explode With Terrific Force—Nobody Was Injured.

Pittsburg, April 26.—One of the most remarkable and spectacular fires seen in this vicinity, started Wednesday night in the William Zoeller Packing Co.'s plants, Spring Garden avenue, Allegheny, opposite this city.

Early yesterday, when the fire was thought to be under control, a large fireproof warehouse, in which was stored 500,000 pounds of lard, suddenly burst into flames. All efforts to extinguish the fire in this department were futile and the firemen finally fastened the iron doors of the building, shutting in the burning lard.

The interior of the building soon became a seething furnace. Spurting from crevices, doors and windows, streams of hot grease ran into a sort of trench hurriedly prepared in an endeavor to prevent the hot fluid from spreading over surrounding territory.

Shortly after the fire was discovered and while thousands of spectators were gathered, a dozen large ammonia tanks exploded with terrific force. There was a panic among the spectators, but no one was injured. That no loss of life attended the fire is considered marvelous.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning the fire had practically burned itself out. It was said that the loss would reach $300,000, partly covered by insurance.

FRATERNAL SOCIETIES.

Canadian Association In Conference At Temple Building, Toronto.

Toronto, April 26.—The Canadian Fraternal Association are in session in the Temple Building, President C. A. Lapp of Brighton presiding.

Wednesday Counsellor Lyman Lee of Hamilton read a report regarding the insurance legislation passed in the last session in the interests of fraternal societies, and to several court cases.

Secretary-Treasurer William Montague of Hamilton reported finances to be in good condition.

C. A. Gower of Lansing, Mich., secretary-treasurer of the National Fraternal Congress, gave an address, to which J. A. Paterson, K. C., and F. G. Inwood replied.

Committee reports will be received to-day.

CHAMBERS GETS SIX YEARS.

For Assault at Peterboro — Toronto Man With a Bad Record.

Peterboro, April 26.—Fred Chambers, alias Frank Cameron, of Toronto, who pleaded guilty to three charges of wounding Levi Thorndyke, Pat King and Gilbert Blezard at the Royal Hotel in this city on April 17, and of assaulting Constable Meharry, was yesterday sentenced in the Police Court by Magistrate Dumble to six years in the Kingston penitentiary. The prisoner got three years on each of the three charges of stabbing, two of the terms to run concurrently. Chambers has a bad record.

KILLED MAN FOR SINGING.

English Pugilist Arraigned On Charge of Murder.

London, April 26.—"Pedlar" Palmer, the English pugilist, who with another man was arrested Wednesday upon suspicion of having caused the death of an unknown man whose body was found in a railroad car coming from Epsom, after the races, was charged at Croyden in the police court with murder. After a passenger on the train had testified that he saw Palmer strike the deceased several blows because he refused to stop singing, the prisoner was remanded.

Killed In a Runaway.

Carman, Man., April 26.—Charles Hugo, aged 40, was killed in a runaway yesterday morning on the farm of Joseph Russell at Barnsley. Hugo came from Hampton Court, England, last September, and worked in the Union Bank, Winnipeg, until a month ago, when he came out to work and learn farming with Russell.

Stoned By Naples Mob.

Rome, April 26.—During a religious procession at Paupisi, Province of Naples, a man refused to remove his hat. This provoked an attack by the crowd, headed by priests, who shouted, "Death to the Protestants."

The man was injured by stones thrown at him.

FOUGHT TO THE END.

Man Dragged From Cell to Scaffold and Hanged.

Guntersville, Ala., April 26.—Bob Watts (white) was hanged for murder here yesterday, under tragic circumstances.

He had become possessed of a knife and resisted to the end. Ammonia was thrown into his cell and he was thus overcome and dragged to the scaffold by force, coughing and moaning piteously.

Steel Roof Saved Mill.

Sault Ste. Marie, April 26.—The loss by Wednesday's fire at the Soo Pulp Mills will not exceed $100,000. The pulp grinders were intact and can be replaced when new flooring is laid.

Without the steel roofing, which was built last summer, pulp mills Nos. 1 and 2 would have been gutted, and the Soo would have been without electric light last night. The steel roof allowed the firemen to get on top and they were enabled to reach the fire.

There are 250 men out of work.

"Was Rotten With Graft."

Mr. Robitaille Denounces Proposal to Give Away $8,000,000.

Opposes Grant to Quebec Bridge Company—Calls the Transactions a Fraud and Steal—$700,000 Not Accounted For—Increased Provincial Subsidies—Unpleasant Encounter in the Senate.

Ottawa, April 27.—The House wasted the day in debate. Mr. Barker (Hamilton) delivered an arraignment of the Government respecting electoral fraud.

Mr. Robitaille (Independent Liberal, Quebec) denounced the act to give $8,000,000 to the Quebec Bridge Company. It was a shocking fraud and steal.

Mr. Fielding and Mr. Foster followed, and Dr. Sproule keenly analyzed the recklessness at Quebec.

Mr. Fielding admitted that $700,000 could not be accounted for, but promised more careful supervision hereafter. This did not satisfy Mr. Robitaille, who insisted that the whole scheme was rotten with graft.

Mr. Power (West Quebec) answered Mr. Robitaille with considerable heat, but Mr. Robitaille urged the Government to be careful about giving away this $8,000,000 to the men at Quebec who had only contributed $30,000.

Earl Grey will prorogue Parliament to-day at 3 o'clock. There are 100 bills to receive the royal assent making nearly 200 during the session.

MEN RETURN TO WORK.

Fernie Coal Miners Resume Labor Pending Investigation.

Ottawa, April 27.—When the House of Commons met yesterday morning Mr. Lemieux announced that the latest telegrams from Fernie indicated that the conference had failed to bring on an agreement between the parties, but the miners have decided to return to work pending the investigation. (Hear, hear.) He said he had received late Thursday night the following telegram from Mr. Mackenzie King:

"Fernie, B. C., April 25.—Different interpretations on yesterday's proposition at conference to-day, consequently failure to agree. Executive Board now holding meeting with Fernie miners to have miners return to work, pending investigation. Will wire result later."

The following telegram was received yesterday morning from Mr. F. H. Sherman:

"Fernie, B. C., April 26.—Sessions of week resulted —— owing to misunderstanding of industrial disputes act. District Executive, having failed to agree with operators, have decided to advise miners to resume operations immediately. This advice has been accepted by Fernie men. Have reason to believe that operations will be resumed at all mines in this district as soon as possible. Will refer all our disputes to Investigating Board, believing your Government want to see justice to all parties.—F. H. Sherman."

Mr. Lemieux added that he had received a telegram from Sir William Mulock stating that he would leave for Fernie last night instead of to-day.

MARRIAGE BILL KILLED.

Mr. Borden Condemns Government for Extravagance and Corruption.

Ottawa, April 27.—Messrs. Lavergne of Montmagny, Devlin of Nicolet, Martin of St. Mary's, and Devlin of Wright put up a strong opposition during the third reading of the bill to authorize the invalidation of certain marriages of minors. They took the ground that it would be objectionable to Catholics, who were opposed as a matter of conscience to divorce in any shape. Moreover, the bill had been hastily introduced, and little opportunity given for its consideration.

Mr. Devlin of Nicolet made a somewhat vigorous protest against the bill going on, and moved that the committee rise, which would have the effect of setting aside the legislation this session. Mr. Lancaster of Lincoln supported Mr. Devlin's views.

Mr. Brodeur and Dr. Reid, Conservatives, opposed the bill, the latter thinking it unfair of the Ontario Government to ask its passage at this stage. He said it was an outrage for the Federal Government to present it.

The motion that the committee rise then carried, the bill thus being killed.

On motion to go into supply, R. L. Borden moved a strong resolution, condemning the Government for the increased expenditures, equivalent to $22 per head of population, or $110 for every family of five persons. The resolution also made reference to the disclosures in the public accounts committee of improper expenditures, and to electoral corruption that had been established.

Division took place shortly after one o'clock, when Borden's amendment was defeated by 91 to 43, a straight party vote.

Battle in the Senate.

In the Senate last night, there was an unpleasant encounter.

Senator McMullen, in replying to Senator Ferguson's remarks on the provincial subsidies, twitted him with having once resigned from the Senate, only to be defeated for the Commons, and dared him to test public feeling again. He added that Senator Ferguson had not been infallible. From a department over which he had presided in Prince Edward Island there had been a mysterious disappearance, which had never been accounted for.

Senator Ferguson: That is a slanderous and libelous statement, and I demand that the words be taken down."

Senator McMullen said he had made no statement reflecting on Senator Ferguson, who continued to demand that the words be taken down.

Mr. Speaker said that the expression of Senator McMullen, as far as he had proceeded before being interrupted, semed to contain an insinuation.

Senator McMullen ... that an insinuation has been made. I withdraw it.

Senator Ferguson said nearly all Senator McMullen's statements were inaccurate. One inaccuracy was that he had resigned from the Senate and had been defeated in a contest in Prince Edward Island.

He promised to have Senator McMullen's and Hon. Mr. Scott's speeches well circulated in Prince Edward Island.

FROM BRITAIN TO CANADA.

Fast Line of Steamers Under Consideration By Sir Wilfrid.

London, April 27.—(C. A. P.)—Premier Laurier's presence in London has been taken advantage of by the promoters of the Blacksod Bay to Halifax route to Canada.

A long conference, the Canadian Associated Press understands, has taken place between Sir Wilfrid and the promoters, during which the Premier enquired minutely regarding the proposal.

It is said the promoters did not receive much substantial sympathy from Laurier, but the C.A.P. is assured on good authority that the project of a fast service, with steamships equal to any New York route, is receiving most earnest consideration, and that possibly before Laurier leaves an important announcement in connection with the establishing of a fast line of steamers to some port in England may be made.

Sir Frederick Borden, interviewed by the Canadian Lloyds declared the premiums required here on St. Lawrence business are too high, in view of the Government's improvements to the St. Lawrence.

A Wellington, New Zealand, despatch says the Attorney-General states there is considerable prospect that, through Premier Laurier and Sir J. Ward a mail service may be arranged via Vancouver.

PREMIERS ENTERTAINED.

Great Banquet Given at National Liberal Club.

London, April 27.—(C. A. P.)—A great banquet was given the Colonial Premiers at the National Liberal Club, at which Earl Carrington presided.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, Premiers Laurier, Bond, Ward and Botha were present. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman proposed the toast, "Our Guests," in a felicitous speech, remarking that they had come to advance ideas which, perhaps, might not in all particulars be identified with the Liberal party, but there was no antagonism on that account, and nothing but mutual forbearance and good feeling.

He ventured to say that the conference would bring about a great result, if not in the acceptance of any particular proposal, at least in developing, strengthening and securing the great commonwealth of states to which all belonged.

ENGLISH TEAM TO SHOOT.

Will Take Part in Dominion Rifle Association Matches.

Ottawa, April 27.—An English rifle team will compete at the D. R. A. matches in September, and it is likely the Palma Trophy match will take place. At the meeting of the Program Committee of the D. R. A. the matter was discussed. The team will be chosen from the Bisley aggregates much in the same way as our Bisley men are selected. The English marksmen will remain over in Ottawa on their way to Australia, where they are entered in the Empire match to be shot in Sydney, N. S. W., in October.

WILL NOT PROSECUTE.

Lord's Day Alliance Up In Arms Against Decision.

Victoria, B. C., April 27.—The Provincial Government, at the close of the session, announced its attitude on the Dominion Lord's Day Act, declining to assent to any prosecutions under the act.

The Lord's Day Alliance is already up in arms, declaring the Dominion had no power to leave it optional with the provinces to enforce the law.

The Government's reply is to go to Ottawa and fight that out in Ottawa.

Montreal Residence Burned.

Montreal, April 27.—The residence of J. N. Greenshields on Peel street was destroyed by fire yesterday morning. None of the family were at home at the time. The fire was discovered by some of the servants, one of whom, a woman named Sarah Shields, had a narrow escape from losing her life in the flames. She jumped to the ground below, but in the fall she broke her leg and sustained other severe injuries.

The interior of the house was completely ruined and the loss is placed at over $50,000.

Train Has Narrow Escape.

St. John, N. B., April 27.—By the merest chance the Maritime Express was saved from being ditched near Rogersville yesterday. A man who saw the northbound train pass noticed that she had broken a rail. The Maritime was following close behind and he rushed back and flagged her. The place is rough with deep cuttings at each side of the track, and the trainmen believe that the whole train would have been ditched had the break not been discovered. The Mari-

Englishmen in this city may be interested in a letter written by Rev. Edmund Wood, of Montreal, to the Gazette. It seems that, on the evening of St. George's day, Judge Taschereau, at a banquet, said many nice things about the patron saint of Englishmen. In regard to the speech, Rev. Mr. Wood writes:

"I should like to think that the graphic sketch of St. George's life which His Lordship gave, could be reconciled with history. Is it the case?

"Dr. Challoner, a well-known devotional writer of the Roman Catholic Church, in a book of devout Meditations, speaking of St. George divides his subject under three heads, to this effect:

"1. It is clear no one does know anything about St. George.

"2. It is clear no one can know anything about St. George.

"3. It is good, therefore, to meditate on him as one of those hidden saints, who, although unknown to man, are glorious before God."

Question—Who are you?

Answer—A female animal endowed with Social instincts.

Question — What do you mean by these words, "Social instincts?"

Question—How do persons get into this circle?

Answer — In three ways: by Birth, by Purchase, and by Push.

Question — How did you yourself get in?

Answer—By Push.

Question—What is Push?

Answer — Push is the faculty of forcing yourself in where you are not wanted and appropriating a place to which you have no right.

Question—Have you, then, no right to a place in Society?

Answer—No right whatever.

Qestion — How comes it, then, that the other members do not eject you?

Question — What are the characteristics of persons in Society?

Answer — Frivolity, extravagance, self-indulgence, and self-advertisement.

Question — Does it require much money to be in Society?

Question — It is your guests, then who pay your servants' wages?

Answer—It is.

Question—Your smart frocks?

Answer — My dressmaker provides me with those, and I recommend her to my rich acquaintances.

Question — It is your rich acquaintances, then, who pay for your smart frocks?

Answer—It is.

Question — Do you not, then, pay anything for yourself?

Answer—I pay for nothing myself.

Question—Who is Father Vaughan?

Answer — A preacher who wastes his time in telling people what everybody knew already.

Question — Why does he thus waste his time?

Answer — Because he hopes to reform Society.

Question — And will he ever reform Society?

Answer — He will never reform Society. It is impossible.

Question—Why is it impossible?

Answer — Because, if it were reformed, it would no longer be Society.

How Canada's Wage-Earners Are Paid.

BLUE BOOK ISSUED BY CENSUS DEPARTMENT SHOWS THAT FARMERS ARE POORLY PAID—TEACHERS UP TO AVERAGE.

Ottawa, April 24.—A blue book issued by the Bureau of Census and Statistics contains tables which show the number of persons employed in different callings, with their earnings. The tables include every one over 16 years of age, except in the manufacturing class, where 15 years is the minimum.

The average wage is $387.16 for males, and $181.98 for females.

Trade and transportation pay $504.22 as opposed to an average of $676.83 for professions, for each man employed.

Males form 81.47 per cent. of the entire body workers. The total number of wage-earners is 814,930, and the total wage is $283,534,850.

Different callings claim the following proportions of the population:

Agricultural	8.93
Domestic	26.51
Fisheries	.91
Forestry and lumbering	2.02
Manufacturing	33.63
Mining	2.93
Professional	3.31
Trade and transportation	19.57

The average earnings of males in manufacturing are $403.14; in agriculture $207.55; domestic service $272.46.

HOW TEACHERS ARE PAID.

The statistics with regard to the salaries paid to school teachers are especially illuminating. The average salary for male teachers in all Canada is $486, and for female teachers $245. The averages by provinces are as follows:

Province.	Males.	Females.
British Columbia	$676.81	$553.08
Manitoba	487.00	410.22
New Brunswick	412.52	227.61
Nova Scotia	384.03	237.66
Ontario	637.85	307.75
P. E. Island	240.15	180.93
Quebec	450.13	138.44
The Territories	498.12	428.32

Female housekeepers, laundresses nurses, midwives, chair and washer women and sextons are better paid than female teachers in Quebec, while ranch foremen, farm superintendents, garden and nursery managers, hotel employes and foremen in many trades are better paid than male teachers in Ontario.

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

An Unfulfilled Promise

It will be remembered that, among the measures promised in the speech from the Throne was a bill to amend the election act for the purpose of preventing frauds and corruption at the polls. In his speech on the address Sir Wilfrid Laurier declared that the law must be improved and made more severe and especially that it must provide severe penalties for the ballot switchers. Grit papers pointed to the pious promises of the Premier, asking "was ever such virtue seen in public life before?" Conservatives, however, withheld their raptures. They had had many previous examples of what Laurier's promises were worth, and were prepared to believe he was in earnest when they saw deeds following up his words. And who was right, the Grits or the Tories?

Well, the session is now at its close and the severe measure promised by the Government has not appeared. It may be said also that the like promise was made last year in the speech from the Throne. The necessity for such a measure and for its enforcement has been made manifest by a long list of election frauds.

Last week Mr. Borden moved a resolution calling attention to some of these offences, notably the disclosures of the London election, expressing the opinion that the law should be amended to provide the following: For the more effective suppression and punishment of bribery; to prevent frauds in marking, counting and substituting ballots; to prevent accumulation of huge campaign funds and to prohibit contributions thereto by corporations, contractors and promoters; to hasten the hearing of election petitions; to prevent saw-off arrangements; to provide for investigation of corrupt practices.

The motion closed by expressing regret that notwithstanding the pledge in the speech from the Throne and other pledges previously given, no such measure had been submitted to Parliament and no steps taken to amend the law or punish offenders.

This motion was supported in a strong speech by Mr. Borden himself, and also by Mr. Lennox, who read evidence of corruption in Mr. Fielding's own election and the judgment of the court showing that the bribers were agents of Mr. Fielding himself. Mr. Alcorn, of Prince Edward, contributed to the discussion by reading the whole of Pritchett's ghastly confessions of his operations throughout Canada, in switching ballots and instructing deputy returning officers, how to perform the operation. The confessions of Mr. Farr and other deputies who went to school to Mr. Pritchett, and put his lessons into practice were read.

Mr. Fielding, who on the Government side is now leading the Government, gave no excuse for the failure to introduce the promised measure. Mainly his speech was a statement that corruptions in elections was an old offence, that the Tories had not been free from it. There was no undertaking on his part that the offenders would be prosecuted, no regret that the party officers and the party organization had been implicated in these proceedings, no practical suggestion looking to reform, in fact no sign that the Government seriously desires or expects any change in campaign methods. Mr. Borden's resolution was voted down by the usual majority. Among those who voted against it were Mr. Roche and Mr. Carney, the two members from Halifax, who have been for nearly three years evading, delaying and dodging a trial of the petition against themselves. Naturally Messrs. Roche and Carney, who got three sessions and three indemnities by delay in the courts do not support quick trials. Naturally, also, perhaps, the employers, paymasters and beneficiaries of the leading election conspirators do not desire legislation for their more severe punishment.

When the King Plays Cards.

The King is very fond of the game of bridge, and bridge parties are always a great feature wherever he is being entertained.

There is an exceedingly strict etiquette observed in all card games played with His Majesty taking a hand. One cast-iron rule is that the host must never win money from his Royal guest, and for that reason, should there be no lady present, he invariably seats himself opposite His Majesty.

Another rule is that the stakes—which are always low when the King is playing—must always be paid out in newly-minted coins or notes freshly issued by the Bank of England, the reason being that His Majesty never handles money which has been in general circulation. The host, therefore, has to procure a good supply of new coins and notes, which he shares among his guests in exchange for their old money.

A man makes allowances for his faults, even though his wife may be one of them.

It's no use fussing about keeping the faith if you cannot keep your friends.

We postpone and postpone until smiling possibilities are dead.

TO STEP IN AND STOP A WRONG BEING DONE THIS COUNTRY.

Every lover of his country will approve of the demand of The Mail and Empire that the Minister of Justice throw his protecting arms about the resources of our Dominion, so they be not despoiled by the vampires who live and thrive upon the life blood of our fair Dominion. Every lover of humanity will also gladly join in the crusade against that awful foe of this country that is annually slaying eight or ten thousand of the youth and flower of this fair land. Tuberculosis, or consumption, claimed about nine thousand victims in Canada last year. "Ah, yes," you say, "but that merciless disease has been, over and over again, pronounced incurable by the best doctors, and this being the case we are helpless to prevent it." In reply we say, and we are prepared to stand or fall by the statement, that four cases out of every five of the above number could be entirely prevented by the use of Psychine. Probably every instance of these nine thousand cases started with a slight neglected cold or cough, or an attack of la grippe, pneumonia, catarrh or some thoroughly controlable and curable trouble, or some run-down condition that could have been quickly and certainly cured in the early stages by Psychine, and in many cases could have been entirely prevented by its use. Probably no remedy in the world has ever made such a record for itself in the prevention and cure of all throat, lung and stomach troubles as Psychine. Many of the best physicians, whose love of humanity and earnest desire to see genuine cures effected is strong enough to overcome their somewhat natural prejudice against patent or proprietary medicines, are regularly prescribing Psychine in their practice.

"I cannot praise Psychine too highly. It has proved a Godsend to me. After taking Psychine a few days my chronic bronchial cough left me, and the soreness in my lungs disappeared. I continued the treatment for one month. My flesh and strength quickly returned, and again I felt the luxury of being at my best, able to enjoy life to the fullest extent. I am glad to state my recovery has been permanent. My sleep and appetite are splendid.

"MRS. ED. BADGLEY,

"Bloomfield, Ont."

These are the kind of letters we are receiving daily. If any persons take Psychine without being benefitted they forget to write us the facts. We would take it as a favor if anyone who has used Psychine, or who knows anyone who has used it without benefit, would give us their names and addresses. We will reward any trouble or expense in furnishing us with this information. We know that forty-nine out of every fifty who use it are cured. For sale at all druggists or at Dr. T. A. Ghastly Tale of the Thaw Home.

Pittsburg, April 21. — Lyndhurst, the palatial home of Mrs. William Thaw to-day gave up its ghastly secret. For five years the Thaw millions and Thaw prestige have kept from the public news of the suicide of a Kentucky woman, wife of a Presbyterian minister and a relative of Mrs. William Thaw, who hanged herself in the bathroom of the Thaw home. To-day, however, through the admissions of the then coroner of Allegheny county the story became public and Pittsburg is only waiting the coming of the time when the books of the county coroner's office will be opened in order that details may be supplied.

The Thaws, it would now appear, simply waved their magic wand and not a word of the tragedy was allowed to creep out. The coroner was called and a regular inquest held, but the matter was not allowed to go any further, and the social standing of Lyndhurst and of the Thaws was for the time saved.

So far was the work of suppressing details of the crime of self-destruction carried that the Rev. W. L. McEwan, pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of Pittsburg, Mrs. Thaw's congregation, was pressed into service and sent with the body to the Kentucky home, where he preached the funeral sermon, and it is said the relatives of the woman are today in ignorance of the fact that the woman took her own life while on a visit to Mrs. William Thaw in fashionable Lyndhurst. It is not believed by friends of the noted pastor that even he knew the woman had killed herself, and the Rev. Mr. McEwan when asked about the affair by telephone simply moaned and hung up the receiver without reply. It was the Rev. McEwan who married Harry Kendall Thaw and Evelyn Nesbitt.

Mrs. William Thaw, mother of Harry Thaw, has since declined to stay in Lyndhurst save when she is surrounded by a large party, as she is somewhat superstitious. She has advertised Lyndhurst for sale and has built another residence nearby. The fact that she was so anxious to sell the famous Lyndhurst set on foot an investigation here, which brought to light the evidence of the tragedy. It is claimed that Harry Thaw, who is perhaps more superstitious than any other member of the family, has always urged his mother to sell the house, which, he claims, was haunted since the suicide, and Harry would never sleep there without a light in his room.

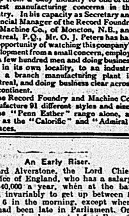
AQUATICS.

Hawthorne Thinks English Oarsmen Are The Best.

Says Julian Hawthorne in the New York American: "Rowing is an art and a science which cannot be thoroughly mastered during the three or four years of a college course. To be a first-rate oar, rowing should be like a second nature to a man. Our men are apt learners, and often make a good appearance on the water, but they have not the 'watermanship' of English 'Varsity crews. And in a hard race watermanship counts for much. It keeps the men in a boat together even when tired and hard pressed, it involves familiarity with all possible conditions in a race, and in a degree it takes the place of the hard training which our crews are obliged to undergo, and which sometimes proves exhausting to young fellows of their average age in spite of their good muscular development.

"That last year's race was won by Cambridge against Harvard seems, beyond a doubt, a victory of watermanship. Harvard was not enough at ease in their boat to be able to put forth their full powers in the race, so that at the finish they were actually less exhausted than were their winning rivals. The Cambridge men had been rowing ever since they were old enough to sit up in boat; they could be beaten only by a crew of stronger men who had had their advantages of early practice. And had our men had those advantages there is small doubt that they would have been victorious, for they appear to have been, man for man, the stronger and better trained crew of the two.

"Our long winter, no doubt, hampers us in our preparations for a race; the English can get out on the water almost every day in the year, and indoor practice is not nearly so effective as outdoor. But if our school boys were to take up rowing, this handicap would be greatly lessened. I hope the new movement will be vigorously taken up by our great schools; it will be good for the boys as boys, and still better for them after they enter college and are put on the crews."



MR. O. J. PETERS

Secretary of Record Foundry Co.

To few men are accorded the privilege of seeing the work under their hands develop from a baby industry to one of the largest manufacturing concerns in the country. In his capacity as Secretary and Financial Manager of the Record Foundry and Machine Co., of Moncton, N.B., and Montreal, P.Q., Mr. O. J. Peters has had the opportunity of watching this company's development from a small concern, employing a few hundred men and doing business only in its own locality, to an industry with a branch manufacturing plant in Montreal, and doing business clear across the continent.

The Record Foundry and Machine Co. manufacture 91 different styles and sizes of the "Penn Esther" range alone, as well as the "Calorific" and "Admiral" furnaces.

An Early Riser.

Lord Alverstone, the Lord Chief Justice of England, who has a salary of $40,000 a year, when at the bar used invariably to get up between 5 and 6 in the morning, except when he had been late in Parliament. On one occasion he wanted to talk over a certain point in a brief with one of his juniors. He asked the young man to call in the morning. "At what time, Sir Richard?" asked the young barrister. "At half-past six, at my house," was the reply. The young man arrived on the stroke of the moment. In order to do it, however, he sat up all night!

Great Britain's Foxhounds.

There are about 170 packs of foxhounds, consisting of about 6,000 couples, in England and Wales, and as the average number of days the hounds are out is about three per week the cost of the packs alone is at least £500,000 a year. This is taking no account of Ireland's twenty-six packs, with about 1,100 couples, and Scotland's eleven packs of 300 couples.

A Colliery Record.

What is claimed to be a record day's winding of coal for any colliery in the United Kingdom was made last week at the Bargoed colliery of the Powell Dyffryn Company, Cardiff. The quantity of coal raised during the day was 3,245 tons.

CAN BE BANISHED BY THE RICH, RED BLOOD DR. WILLIAMS PINK PILLS ACTUALLY MAKE.

The health and happiness of growing girls and women of mature years depends upon the blood supply. There is a crisis in the life of every woman when there are distressing headaches and backaches; when life seems a burden and when some women seem threatened with even the loss of their reason. It is at this period that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills prove a blessing to women. Every dose increases the richness and the redness of the blood supply, and this new blood strengthens the organs, enables them to throw off disease and banishes the headaches and backaches and dizziness and secret pains that have made life a burden. There are thousands and thousands of growing girls and women in Canada who owe their health and happiness to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mrs. James McDonald, of Sugar Camp, Ont., is one of these. She says: "I was badly run down, felt very weak and had no appetite. I suffered from headaches and backaches and a feeling of weakness. I could scarcely drag myself about and felt that my condition was growing worse. I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and got a dozen boxes, but before they were all used I had fully regained my health, and was able to do my housework without the least fatigue. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been a great blessing to me."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People from any medicine dealer or by mail from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50. If you are weak or ailing give these pills a fair trial—they will not disappoint you.

RIVAL BRITAIN ON SEA.

Germany Jubilant Over Increase In Mercantile Marine.

German shipping and commercial circles are in a fever of delight at the extraordinary progress which their oversea shipping has been recently making. A few years more of such progress, they say, and the maritime supremacy of Britain will begin to be called in question.

Undoubtedly the figures which are being published, if not alarming, afford at any rate, food for serious reflection. Take, for example, the Suez Canal. In 1882 British shipping through the canal was over 4,000,000 tons; in 1906 it had risen to 8,500,000, or a trifle over 100 per cent. increase. In 1882 German shipping was 127,000 tons; in 1906, 2,225,000, an increase of about 1,700 per cent. In 1882 England owned 81 per cent. of all shipping passing through the canal; in 1906 the percentage had sunk to 63. In 1882 Germany owned only 2 1-2 per cent., but in 1906 this had risen to over 16 per cent.

Equal jubilation has been caused by figures recently published by the Norddeucher Lloyd and the Hamburg-American Lines with regard to the enormous increase of their tonnage, which is now far in excess of that of any British rival and is rapidly increasing. Both lines are rapidly developing their trade with the Far East and in seas which until a few years ago were British preserves. Their lines to India, China, the Straits Settlements and Japan are some of their most flourishing ventures, and it now has been decided to put on steamers to trade with ports in the Persian Gulf. German captains not being above calling at any port no matter how insignificant.

Equally surprising are the figures with regard to shipbuilding. German yards have been fully employed, and during the last ten years the number of men employed in shipbuilding has increased fivefold.

The Baffled Lion.

(Near Lake Albert Edward Major Powell Cotton was saved from being killed by a wounded lion by a folded copy of Punch which he had in his pocket.)

The lion in his wounded pride,
His victim mauled with tears and scrunches,
And all resistance he defied,
Until he met at last with "Punch's."

If "Punch" could thwart these wild-cat schemes,
And all a lion's efforts cumber,
Just as it should have been, it seems,
It must have been a funny number.

Yet "Punch's" lovers with disgust
Must own that when a lion rages,
It's clear his sense of humor must
Be but in embryonic stages.

He tore at "Punch" with all his strength,
And sorely he began to rue it,
Because he was compelled at length,
To own that he could not get through it. —M. S.

Smugglers Killed.

A remarkable discovery of ammunition smuggling has been made here, after a fight, in which two Pathans were shot, says a correspondent from Lucknow, India.

Two constables, returning from patrol duty, found three Pathans with several camels, preparing to cross the bridge of boats connecting the Nowshera cantonment with the North Bank of the Kabul river. When questioned, they said they were going to Swat, and had nothing except empty bags and fodder for their camels.

The police asked to see the bags, and were then offered bribes, which they refused. They insisted on the search, and when they were joined by a third constable a free fight ensued.

Two Pathans were shot and the third surrendered.

Examination of their packs showed that they had ninety packages of Martini-Henry ammunition concealed among the bags.

Home For Lost Cats.

Lady Decies opened in the Fulham road, London, a home for lost cats, which may fairly be described as a cats' paradise. The only qualification for admission is homelessness, and the accommodation provided is most luxurious.

Outside there is a large wired-in run for exercise, furnished with a tree and a bed of mould. Inside, the sleeping quarters for the winter time consist not only of little wooden huts but of shelves, arranged like berths in a ship's cabin, which the inmates reach by vigorous springs from one to another of a series of brackets. The daily menu is most elaborate, and meals are served as follows:

Dinner—Cats' meat; fish, two days a week; or for invalids, gruel or rice, vegetables.

Tea (at four o'clock)—Milk.

Supper (at eight)—Same as dinner.

Nightcap (at nine)—Milk.

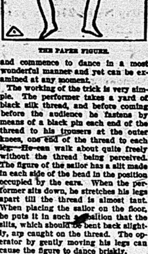
FOLKS

THE DANCING SAILOR.

A Good Trick That Will Amuse and Mystify the Beholder.

This is a capital trick. The performer brings forward a cardboard figure of a sailor, colored very brilliantly, about eighteen inches in height. The legs are in two pieces, fastened at the knees and thighs by knotted strings so that they can move freely. The performer gives the figure for examination, but nothing in the way of connection about the cardboard is found.

He then seats himself, facing the audience, and places the figure between his knees, with its feet touching the ground. The figure will stand upright and commence to dance in a most wonderful manner and yet can be examined at any moment.



THE PAPER FIGURE.

The working of the trick is very simple. The performer takes a yard of black silk thread, and before coming before the audience he fastens by means of a black pin each end of the thread to his trousers at the outer knees, one end of the thread to each leg. He can walk about quite freely without the thread being perceived. The figure of the sailor has a slit made in each side of the head in the position occupied by the ears. When the performer sits down, he stretches his legs apart till the thread is almost taut. When placing the sailor on the floor, he puts it in such a position that the slits, which should be bent back slightly, are caught on the thread. The operator by gently moving his legs can cause the figure to dance briskly.

ABOUT THE CUCKOO.

Female Does Not Lay Its Eggs In Nests of Other Birds.

A popular fallacy is that the cuckoo lays eggs in another bird's nest, this conclusion being drawn from the fact that these eggs have been found in the nest of the wood thrushes, the robins and other birds, says the Chicago News. The real fact is that the cuckoo mother lays her eggs on the ground, and then her gallant male friends gather them up one by one and deposit them in different nests. In the spring of the year the male cuckoo appears first, but never makes his presence known by any sound. These male birds explore the field assiduously and locate every new nest that is being constructed in the vicinity. When the female birds arrive, everything is arranged for their reception.

Usually there are seven or eight male cuckoos to three females, but they never quarrel over this disproportion of the sexes. As soon as the female arrives she lays her eggs on the ground, and then each male takes an egg in his bill and deposits it in a nest selected beforehand. One egg to a nest is all, and if one is already there the cuckoo will go to another.

The cuckoo egg has the faculty of hatching out earlier than most others, and the deluded foster mother soon finds a big, clamorous youngster in her nest, while her true eggs are gradually forced out of the nest by the interloper.

What Red Coral Is.

The red coral that is used for necklaces is a horny axis which supports a number of soft bodied coral-like animals, or polyps, the entire structure bearing a strong resemblance to a small shrub. The fishermen, after they have brought this shrublike colony to the surface, clean the soft animal matter away, preserving the red core, or axis, which is sold as jewelry. Although red coral contains some lime, it is largely composed of a substance akin to horn, and, like horn, it takes a fine polish, says the St. Nicholas Magazine. Horn, wool and other animal substances of this nature almost invariably change their color when brought into intense heat.

Why and Whether.

Things that I'm wanting to know are so many.
Hundreds and thousands of questions, no less,
I'd like to ask, but the answers to any
How can I guess, how can I guess?
Why is the sun in the winter so chilly?
Is it all frosted and covered with snow?
Couldn't we warm it, or would that be silly?
I'd like to know, I'd like to know.

What makes the year very old in December?
Seems to me really the same when it's new.
Am I too little, or can't you remember?
I'm asking you, I'm asking you.
Is it a war in the sky makes the thunder?
Does the spring weather come up through the well?
When I am old I shall know, but I wonder
Whether you'll tell, whether you'll tell.

Larder Lake Goldfields

As stated in my news letters last summer I then began investigating the Larder Lake district north of Cobalt. I have done so thoroughly, and from personal investigation on the ground, the employment of reliable engineers and a corps of experienced prospectors, I and my associates have now ample proof of the great value of this field.

We know so surely what is there (and what immense probabilities there are as well) that we have already put nearly $150,000.00 cash into the field.

Our employees on the ground number nearly one hundred and our stamp mill will very soon be in operation.

I am a practical mining man, and I need hardly say that we would not put in such money and work unless fully justified.

The width of the veins or reefs in sight, and the values they bear when such width is considered, is extraordinary. In Africa such reefs are profitably mined when bearing but a few pennyweights of gold to the ton—at Larder Lake average assays from across many reefs run ounces of gold to the ton. An ounce is equal to $20, and the cost of mining and milling should not exceed $2.50.

I and my associates see many millions of dollars of clean legitimate profits before us in these goldfields.

By forming a company, putting up our hard cash, as stated above, and getting in first, we have secured thirty-seven forty acre claims, which we believe to be the cream of the Larder Lake Goldfields.

Our present stamp mill is a small one. We want a larger mill—from 100 to 200 stamps—and we must spend money in opening up our large acreage.

We have to put in considerable money, and, indeed, would carry the whole thing ourselves but that, like everything else, we have other interests as well to take care of.

We are therefore affording others the opportunity of joining us and sharing with us the large profits we are going to make—profits from dividends, and also from the increase of market value in our stock.

Our Company is known as the LARDER LAKE PROPRIETARY GOLDFIELDS, LIMITED, and among the directors and gentlemen identified with it are the following: Col. G. Sterling Ryerson, ex-M.P.P.; Senator L. V. Ulrey; Lieut.-Col. A. N. Worthington, Member Dominion Parliament; T. Herbert Lennox, Member Provincial Parliament; Chas. H. Waterous, ex-Mayor of Brantford; E. P. Bucke, of "Granby" fame; Dr. D. H. Piper, of London; P. Kirkgaarde, M.E., Member National Geographical Society; Sylvester Jenckes, President Jenckes Machine Company; William Farwell, President Eastern Townships Bank; C. P. Brown, of Toronto; Dr. Preston, Member Provincial Parliament, and others of like standing.

For the purposes mentioned above a limited amount of stock is offered by the underwriters (Canada Mines, Limited) at their first ground floor price of $1.00 per share. This is being subscribed for rapidly and the next allotment will be at a materially advanced price. The stock will then be listed on the exchanges and placed on the New York and Boston curbs, when, as in every proposition I have been connected with, it will, without doubt, command a legitimate market at a still higher price.

THIS OPPORTUNITY WILL NOT LAST LONG.

GOD'S LITTLE GIRL.

She left her home in the starry ways,
And reached our arms in the April days;
We thought to keep her and hold her here,
And 'our little girl' we called "the dear."

One pleasant eve, when the sun had dipped
Out of sight, and the stars had slipped
Silently back to their wonted ways,
She turned her face with a wistful gaze,

Up to the blue of the arching skies;
We knew by the look in her pretty eyes,
And the smile that brightened her small face so,
It was time for God's little girl to go.

A kiss was dropped on her curly head,
'Sweet little heart, good-by,' we said,
Then, unafraid, though the way was dim,
God's little girl went back to Him.

President Schurman said a year or two ago, "We have no great man," and now the English press respond, "Neither have we." But is it not a mistake? asks the Watertown Times. In the old days a few men towered so high above the common level as to be esteemed great. The common level has risen so high that it is a question whether they would appear as great to-day. Again there is no present great emergency. When one comes the man to meet it generally appears. Also the greatness of a man is rarely recognized by his contemporaries. History fixes his place and he looms up on the distant horizon.

A LADY OF RESOURCE.

Beautiful English Countess Goes Into Fruit Business.

Most Canadians have heard or read of the beautiful Countess of Warwick, who has for many years been an ardent socialist. The name and fame of Warwick are so closely associated with feudal privileges and king-making power that it is difficult to associate a countess of that line with anything so modern and undecorative as socialism. Lady Warwick's views are described by one writer as a kind of pink-tea democracy, rather than the red variety.

Her sister, also a woman of physical charms, Lady Algernon Gordon-Lennox, has recently shown that she holds in light esteem the convention that a feminine aristocrat shall be useless. Not content with being known as a perfectly-gowned woman and one of the cleverest amateur gardeners in England, she has also undertaken to carry on an industry which appeals to every housewife. She is going to establish a fruit-bottling business at Broughton, Oxfordshire and is confident of success, as the trade in bottled and tinned commodities has greatly increased of late. The gardens at Broughton Castle are the most beautiful in the county, with their hundreds of different kinds of tea-roses. If equal success crowns her efforts in fruit bottling, Lady Gordon-Lennox may prove a formidable competitor to Californian and Chicagoan firms, which have been rather unpopular in England since last year's "exposures."

PATENT MEDICINES

The Honest Physician is Anxious to Cure and Uses the Best Available Remedies.

The proposed legislation through the Dominion Parliament for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of patent or proprietary medicines is of the utmost importance, and it is receiving a great deal of attention, not only by the proprietary medicine manufacturers, but also by the leading doctors and druggists. Every manufacturer of reliable and high class remedies welcomes the bill as a step in the right direction. The discussion has brought out the fact that the best physicians in Canada and on the continent approve of and prescribe Psychine in cases of the most difficult character. In a recent instance of very serious throat and lung trouble the patient had been using Psychine. Two leading United States specialists were consulted, in addition to two eminent Canadian physicians. Upon learning what the patient was using, a sample of Psychine was taken and analyzed, with the result that the physicians advised its continuance. They prescribed no other medicine but Psychine, with the result that the patient has fully recovered and is a splendid walking and talking advertisement for the wonderful curative power of a remedy that will "stand up" before the keenest professional criticism and analysis. As a builder up of the system and restorer of all wasted conditions, Psychine has no equal, and the best and most earnest physicians recognize this fact.

"At the age of 25 my lungs were in a terrible state. I had la grippe the year before; it settled on my lungs and I kept steadily growing worse till I got down so low I was in bed for six weeks. I had a consultation of doctors, and they said they could do nothing more for me. Then I started to use Psychine. I took the medicine for more than a year. It certainly did wonders for me. I am now as strong as I was before my sickness."
MRS. H. HOPE,
Morpeth, Ont.

Psychine, pronounced Si-keen, is the greatest of tonics, building up the system, increasing the appetite, purifying the blood, aids digestion, and acts directly upon the throat and lungs, giving tone and vigor to the entire system. More "Jungle" Complaints.

Dr. Blyth has reported to the Marylebone Borough Council that a few of the canned meats from America, which he analyzed, were distinctly unfit for human food and made from dirty material, "probably enough the sweepings of the factory." Samples of the latest consignments of canned foods from the United States examined were wholly unobjectionable.

CASHIER REFUSES TO BE HELD UP IN DAYLIGHT.

Draws Revolver and Fires at Thieves —Fierce Fight Follows—One Man Captured by the Crowd — Other Taken to Hospital Dying—Demanded All Cash Available—Met With Warm Reception.

A daring attempt was made recently by two desperadoes to rob the National Bank in Johannesburg, and in the pitched battle with the bank officials which followed one of the men was fatally shot.

Banks and business houses generally have armed their employes in consequence of frequent burglaries in Johannesburg during the last few months. Pedestrians have been held up and robbed in lonely streets, residences have been ransacked and shops looted in the most audacious manner.

This bank raid, however, was the boldest attempt yet made.

Two men entered the Harrison street branch of the National Bank when some of the officials were at lunch, and practically no business was being transacted.

Walking boldly up to the cashier's window, one man thrust a revolver through the window and demanded all the cash available. Meanwhile the second man kept guard at the street door.

Instead of complying with the demand, the cashier drew a revolver from a half-open drawer, and fired point-blank at the robber. The bullet hit him on the jaw, and he dropped to the floor.

The second robber immediately returned the fire; and half a dozen shots were exchanged with the employes behind the counter. One bullet struck a clerk in the shoulder; but the other shots went wide, and were imbedded in the walls and ceiling.

The noise of the fusillade attracted men from the street, and they captured the second robber as he tried to bolt through the door after emptying his revolver. He was overpowered after a severe struggle. The other man was removed to the hospital dying.

Expenses of Government.

Some very interesting items appear in the Imperial Government appropriation accounts for the year ended March 31, 1906, which were issued recently. The accounts include Parliamentary grants for Civil Service classes and revenue departments, including postoffice, packet and telegraph services. The gross total grants amounted to £50,267,562, but the expenditure was kept well within bounds, so that there is left the handsome surplus of £798,308. Amongst the more curious details are £1,804 for the construction of a motor-car garage at the Royal Mews, Pimlico; £608 for the construction of a lift at St. James's Palace; and a marriage gratuity of £77 to a female warder at Holloway. Getting rid of the old laundry and bakehouse at 10 Downing street and making a new scullery cost £471, and new washhouses at Windsor Castle £157. Another notable item is the fact that, owing to absence of fog, South Kensington Museum saved £610 on its lighting bill. Coming to bigger affairs of state, we learn that the Dogger Bank outrage inquiry cost £1,866; the Algeciras Conference, £648; Prince Arthur's mission to Tokio, £2,174; and Lord Selborne's traveling expenses in South Africa, £1,200. The smallest item in the list is the New Hebrides Commission, which stands at the low figure of £15. The biggest is for the maintenance of the ex-chief of Mosquito in Jamaica, namely, £13,221.

Two Hen Stories.

One of the inmates of the Animals' hospital, Hugh street, Westminster, London, is a two-year-old hen, one of a family of nine, who is suffering from a peculiar disease in its crop. The other eight have all died, one after the other, with the same disease, and special efforts are being made to save the life of the last. "Every day," says the doctor, "an india rubber tube is inserted in the bird's mouth, and its crop is filled with warm water. Then the hen is turned upside down, and the water allowed to trickle out. At first the bird was naturally indignant, but now she seems to even like it."

At Moulton Seas End, near Spalding, Mr. Dilworth lost a fine fat hen five or six weeks ago, and it has just been found in a hovel a mere bag of bones. It could not get out, and had gone all that time without food.

Hidden In Gully.

A strange discovery of sovereigns, for which, up to the present, no owner can be found, was reported to the Wandsworth Borough Council recently.

The surveyor, Mr. Marten, stated that a total of $105 in gold was found by employes of the council in a gully in Clapham Park road the other day. Twelve pounds were found in three separate amounts, the other nine pounds being discovered after a special search.

The men who made the strange discovery refused to surrender the money at first, but were at length prevailed on to do so. The matter was reported to the police, but despite this fact, nobody has yet claimed the money.

Ald. Lorden suggested that "the least said the soonest mended," and the subject was dropped.

Historic Relic Doomed.

The house in which Daniel Defoe wrote "Robinson Crusoe" is doomed to demolition. This is the old manor house standing back from the road opposite Tooting Junction and surrounded by an old-world garden. The house is seldom visited by English people, but many Americans alight to inspect it on their way to view Merton and what is left there relating to Nelson.

Whites Wants a Refuge.

It was decided at a public meeting held recently at Melmoth, Natal, to urge on the Government the immediate necessity of building a jail and a laager for the protection of the district, owing to fears of another native arising.

Several speakers stated that the eyes of the colonists had been opened by the late rebellion, and signs were not now wanting that the natives were unrestful, their conduct being, in fact, worse than previous to the rebellion.

It was declared that one chief had only to hold up his finger to cause a general rising. It was asserted that a laager was absolutely necessary as a place of refuge in case of necessity.

Query.

Is there a man in this broad land
Who never to a friend has said,
"Old man, I have a remedy
That'll cure that cold in your head?"

Any W.G.&R. Shirt fits better than any ordinary shirt. One reason is the accurate, careful spacing of the buttonholes. Unless they meet each other perfectly—if one were even a little higher or lower than its mate—the bosom would pucker—pull—bind.

Buttonholes on W.G.&R. shirts are placed right, are made right, and stay right, even after many trips to the washtub.

For Rheumatism

"Fruit-a-tives" remove from the blood the poison which causes Rheumatism.

Rheumatism means poisoned blood. The kidneys, bowels and skin should rid the system of waste matter. If either of these vital organs become weakened or diseased, the body cannot throw off this waste fast enough.

One of these body poisons is UREA, which is eliminated both by the kidneys and skin. If the skin action is poor—if the kidneys are inflammed—urea stays in the system—is changed into uric acid—carried by the blood to the nerves and joints—and causes Rheumatism.

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Rheumatism because they eliminate urea, by increasing the action of bowels, kidneys and skin.

This is the only possible way in which Rheumatism can be cured to stay cured. And "Fruit-a-tives" is the only remedy in the world that completely eradicates the disease from the system.

"Fruit-a-tives" are fruit juices in which the natural medicinal action of fruit is many time increased by the process of combining them.

"Fruit-a-tives" will cure almost any case of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuralgia.

Then tonics and antiseptics are added and the whole made into tablets. 50c. a box—6 for $2.50. At all dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa. 111

JOSEPH FAITHFUL IN PRISON—GOLDEN TEXT: "BE THOU FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH AND I WILL GIVE THEE A CROWN OF LIFE."

Time — Thirteen years B. C. 1729-1716 (Ussher). Ten in slavery, and three in prison.

Place — "It is not certainly known in what city of Egypt Potiphar dwelt. Tradition has fixed on On, called by the Greeks Heliopolis (the City of the Sun) as the scene alike of Abraham's visit to Egypt, of Joseph's captivity, and of the education if not the birth of Moses. Others, and with more apparent probability, regard Zoan or Tanis, near the land of Goshen, as the abode of Pharaoh."—Blaikie. Zoan, the modern San, is near one of the mouths of the Nile. On was situated near the head of the Nile delta, 20 miles north of Memphis, and six or seven northeast of modern Cairo.

Persons — Joseph was 17 years old when he entered Egypt; about 22 years old when made ruler of Potiphar's estates; about 27 years old when put in prison; about 30 years old when made ruler of Egypt. Jacob was still living in Hebron with eleven sons. He was 108 to 121 years old.

Place in History — Before the time of Abraham, an invasion of Western Semites from Canaan, called Hyksos or Shepherds, had overrun Egypt and seized the government. There were three dynasties of Hyksos Pharaohs, whose reigns extended, according to various computations, from 511 to 661 years. The third dynasty was on the throne in Joseph's time.

As Joseph was led by the Midianites a slave, down into Egypt, his life passed into the shadow of dark clouds. One after the other they rose upon him, until his ruin seemed certain.

"In the anguish of his soul, Joseph was carried away past his father's green valley and deep well, past his mother's grave, past the very home at Hebron, on the distant height." The lad must have "thought, with keen grief, of his father and Leah and Dinah, in their dark, shady tents behind those hills, and of little red-cheeked laughing Benjamin running out and in."

Joseph was exposed for sale in the open market. "It was a pitiful plight to be in—to have to face the peering looks of possible purchasers, as they scanned his special 'points.'" That was a dark cloud; but the light in it was the fact that he was purchased by a kind and discerning master. Potiphar (whose name means 'he whom the Ra—the sun god—gave') was an important officer of Pharaoh's many-officered court. "It seems that he was at the head of what we may call the Egyptian state police, which formed one of the corps of the army, though largely employed in civil duties." He doubtless lived in a large and beautiful house, and Joseph's duties there served as an excellent introduction to the great part he was afterwards to perform.

In Potiphar's house Joseph was exposed to "the sorest temptation that can befall any one—to sin and prosper rather than resist and suffer." Joseph's is "the history of a man who kept his heart pure and tender, and who thereby gained 'that wisdom which comes only to the pure in heart.'"

And Joseph's master. . . put him into the prison. "That he did not at once order him to a capital punishment could only be because he had not the power of putting slaves to death." [illegible] Potiphar did [illegible] But, at [illegible] his wife's accusa- [illegible] terrible. [illegible] 18 speaks of fetters and chains entering into flesh. In Gen. 40; 15 Joseph speaks the prison, literally as a [illegible] may well pity virtuous Joseph. he was indeed cast, as claimed by dition, into the present dungeon of citadel of Cairo, which is composed of dark, loathsome, and pes- lential passages, where the prison- rs are chained to the wall, and cold ater is poured upon them until they ave given up all their money to heir tormentors.

Joseph's conscience approved his urse. It was better for him to be a prison, from such a cause, than a palace through compliance with oseph was conscious of God's ap- val. 21. The Lord was with Joseph. less than he had been in Poti- 's house, and for the same rea-

In time Joseph received also the approval of man, favor in the sight of the keeper of the prison. Not Potiphar, but "an inferior officer who was charged with the actual discipline of the prison."

There was added freedom from his fetters, and an honorable trust. 22. The keeper of the prison committed to Joseph's hand all the prisoners. "Thus, even in the unlatticed dungeon the sun and moon look in upon him and bow to him; and while his sheaf seems at it's poorest, all rust and mildew, the sheaves of his masters do homage."

Among the prisoners that came under Joseph's care were two of especial prominence. The butler. The chief of the butlers (v. 2), the royal cup-bearer, an official of great influence, because he had access to the sovereign in his most private moments, as had the cup-bearer, Nehemiah. And his baker. The chief baker (v. 2). "The Pharoah's kitchen was organized on an elaborate scale: Egypt had long been celebrated for its cooking and its confectionery, and the different kinds of bread and cakes that were made were numberless. Equally numberless were the officials who superintended the royal kitchens and bake-house, and whose titles and order of precedence are enumerated in the papyri. Like the cup-bearer, the chief baker was an important officer of state." Had offended their lord. There is a Jewish tradition that an attempted poisoning was the offence of the two prisoners: "but if this had been true, they would probably have been dealt with in a more summary way." It is more likely that the officers were thrown into prison "on account of some very trifling offence." The event would thus show Joseph something of the tyrannic power of the autocratic government into whose hands he had fallen. The knowledge of Pharaoh's vast, irresponsible power would be one more dark cloud over the captive. This experience would tend to make Joseph a more humane ruler when the power came into his own hands.

These officials in disgrace would talk to Joseph with considerable freedom, especially as he was their servant. "He had now ample opportunity for acquiring information which afterwards stood him in good stead, for apprehending the character of Pharoah, and for making himself acquainted with many details of his government, and with the general condition of the people."

5. They dreamed a dream, both of them. "It is not surprising that three nights before Pharoah's birthday these functionaries of the court should have recalled in sleep the parts they themselves used to play in the festival."

7. Wherefore look ye so sadly today? Notice Joseph's ready sympathy. "Had he sulked in prison, had he grown sour and malicious, he might have remained there till death." "Joseph had suffered like them, and therefore he understood their feelings. We do not often remember that suffering is absolutely necessary to capacitate us for sympathy."

8. There is no interpreter. "In Egypt it was the business of men trained for the purpose, called in Gen. 41, 8, magicians and wise men, to interpret dreams, and to such the butler and baker could have no access from their prison." Do not interpretations belong to God? (A glimpse of Joseph's real humility. Loyal to Jehovah in that heathen land, he made essentially the same reply when asked by Pharoah to interpret his dream two years later. (Gen. 41, 16)

9. The chief butler in his dream found himself ministering to Pharaoh as usual. This dream "has been curiously illustrated by a text discovered by Ebers in the inscriptions of the temple of Edfu, in which the king is seen standing, cup in hand, while underneath are the words, 'They press grapes into the water, and the king drinks'." The three branches of the grapevine which the butler saw, Joseph interpreted as three days, after which the butler was to be restored to freedom and to his customary employment.

Doubtless expecting a similarly happy interpretation, the chief baker related his dream. Here also the account has been confirmed by a study of ancient Egypt. "Even so trifling a detail as the baker's being said to have been carried on the head, is true to Egyptian life; for while the monuments show that men carried their burdens less often on their heads than otherwise, bakers are a marked exception." But the birds had eaten the baker's offering, so that Joseph was obliged to prophesy his execution. Moreover, body by embalming, as illustrated by countless mummies, was thought essential for a happy life after death.

Note that "Joseph's willingness to interpret the dreams of his fellow-prisoners proves that he still believed in his own, that among his other qualities he had this characteristic also of a steadfast and profound soul, that he 'reverenced as a man the dreams of his youth'."

TO VISIT KING EDWARD.

Heiress to "Carmen Sylva's" Throne One of His Cleverest Nieces.

The Crown Princess Marie of Roumania and the Crown Prince are to be the guests of King Edward and Queen Alexandra during several weeks of the London season, and will be present with their Majesties at Ascot races.

The princess is the eldest daughter of the late Duke of Coburg and of the Duchess Marie, and is one of the most gifted of King Edward's nieces.

She was little more than a child when she was married to the heir of the Roumanian throne. Ignoring conventions, she is frequently to be seen walking in the streets in Bucharest with one or more of her beautiful children, but otherwise unattended, and while the exhibition was open there last summer visitors would meet her roaming through the courts with her little girls like ordinary tourists.

The princess is greatly beloved in her husband's country—indeed, her popularity is second only to that of her mother-in-law, Queen Carmen Sylva. She spends most of the summer at a charming country seat at Sinaia, on the borders of Roumania and Hungary, where King Charles and Queen Carmen Sylva have their summer palace.

Two years ago the princess visited England, and lived during a part of the summer, with her children, in a little villa at Cowes.

Her beauty and her magnificent dresses and jewels made the princess a notable figure at King Edward's coronation fetes. She is very fond of outdoor sports, and her hobby is wood-carving.

BOY BURGLAR'S OUTFIT.

Arms and Make-Up of Leader of Juvenile Band.

An amusing story of the exploits of Frank Taylor, the boy burglar of Robin Hood Lane Station, who was charged with shooting at Mr. Damon, a solicitor, of Carshalton, was told recently.

Taylor was caught in Mr. Damon's house, and when his story of having entered it by mistake was not believed, he fired a shot at Mr. Damon from a revolver, and attempted to escape. He was captured after a struggle, in which he bit Mr. Damon's hand severely.

Edwin John Barrett, 14 years old, was also arrested as one of his accomplices, and he made a confession in which he declared that he had accompanied Taylor on ten expeditions, the object of which was robbery. He said that Taylor forced him to accompany him, and stand outside while Taylor entered the houses.

The police stated that they found the following articles in his room:

A pair of handcuffs.

Black velvet coat, with ruffles and trimmed with lace at the cuffs.

Pair of jack boots with spurs.

Three sword bayonets.

Three air guns.

A breech-loading fowling piece.

Several wigs and moustaches.

A theatrical make-up box.

They also found a large quantity of sensational literature, and they learned that the boy had taken lessons in wrestling and in the use of firearms.

How an Earl Won a Bride.

The "ashes" were not the only trophy Lord Darnley brought back in triumph from Australia. He brought back a bride as well. At one of the cricket matches the tall young Englishman lost his handkerchief, and the day being extremely hot, enquired of his friends if any one of them had a spare handkerchief that he might loan.

Immediately a very feminine 'kerchief, sweet scented and of delicate fabric, was handed to him from some invisible source. It was a most acceptable convenience that hot day, and after the match he expressed his desire to thank the kindly lady. An introduction to Miss Florence Murphy followed. She was the daughter of a Victoria magistrate and a member of Sir W. J. Clarke's household as governess to the younger children.

The acquaintance so romantically commenced ripened under the kindly chaperonage of Lady Clarke, an engagement following which stood the test of a long absence in England after the cricketing tour. Then the faithful swain, who is now a representative Irish peer, returned to Australia, claimed his bride, and bore her off in triumph.—Tit-Bits.

Hides In a Chimney.

An amusing story of a bookmaker's device to escape arrest was told at Liverpool, when John Cain, aged 28, was remanded, charged with keeping a betting house.

Three detectives went to the place on Saturday, and found Cain standing at the back door taking bets from two young men. When he say the officers he ran in and fastened the door, having previously let a bullterrier loose in the yard.

The dog having been pacified, the officers burst in the door and searched the house, but Cain had mysteriously disappeared. After a long and patient search he was found up the chimney of an upper room.

Cain was quite out of sight, and it was only because soot was noticed in the fireplace that suspicion of the hiding-place occurred. Detective Sergeant Whitley put his arm up the chimney and caught a boot. Cain was then carefully pulled down and taken into custody. He looked a sorry spectacle.

SHORE SEAL HUNT.

Exciting Scenes In a Leading Newfoundland Industry.

Just at this season on the Newfoundland coast the seal fishery is in progress. The seal are floating south on the huge ice floats from the north and they are hunted for their skins, blubber and flesh. The hunt is carried on in two ways. From sealing steamers which carry several scores of men and which count there takings by thousands and from the shore by the inhabitants of the coast who are content with much smaller takings. It is the latter hunt which is described by a writer in The London Standard.

"Old Harp Bobs Up.

"The Bedlamers, or two-year-old seals, have already passed by, and now through the ice the occasional head of an "old harp" will bob up, and after blinking his eyes clear of the ice and water, standing on his tail, will blandly survey the horizon.

"All clear the seal will then roll over on his back, tossing the icy water into the air over his chest, as if he found it almost impossible to get cool enough. Some of the men are out now on the floating ice where, hidden behind gazes of ice, they are waiting for a shot at protruding heads. Seals are now fat enough to float, so that there is a reasonable chance of getting them if one shoots straight.

Swatching Process.

"This process is called 'swatching.' It is really keen sport for the danger of the moving ice and the offchance of getting ashore again on a headland further south, in which direction the ice is running, lends the element of risk which prevents any sport from being dull.

"Of course it is more than sport to us, for a bad shot means three or four pairs of skin boots swimming away and a loss of dog food, fresh meat and blubber, which we sell for fat. Here in this stage lie half a dozen huge carcasses weighing from three to four hundred pounds each. One is more than a man can pull out on to an ice pan by himself. More than once have I had my hook fast to an old dog, and then, fixing myself firmly, tried to rush the carcass high enough up to balance him over the ice edge, and this all in vain till help was forthcoming.

Old Seals Frozen.

"A stranger, peeping into one of these stages, would be sorely surprised to see the floor covered with old seals lying side by side, apparently alive. Really, however, they are frozen and will have to be brought into the house by the fire for several hours before they can be pelted. After that the skins will be well scraped from fat and stretched out in a frame on the house top to dry, out of the reach of dogs.

"Later on these will be steeped in boiling bark from the fir trees in the large caldrons in which we bark our nets. They will then be made into one class of skin boot. In spring, however, when the ice is wet, we use boots made of green skin, for these will keep out the water much better. When the snow is cold and dry the tan boots are better, being softer, for, by allowing free movement of the toes, they are much warmer, nor will they freeze, being quite dry."

RATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

Organization to Oppose the Lord's Day Alliance.

With a view to counteracting what was termed the "tyrannical and restrictive" efforts of the Lord's Day Alliance there was organized in Toronto recently the Canadian Rational Sunday League, which aims to be an extension of the English National Sunday League. The following committee were appointed to formulate the definite plan of organization: Dr. Goldwin Smith, Messrs. H. P. Dwight, Jas. L. Hughes, Major W. H. Archard, G. A. Graham, L. Robertson, W. C. Fox, W. J. Moody, J. S. Granatstein, D. W. Livingstone, D. G. Lorsh, E. Meek and J. Enoch Thompson.

A resolution which was passed fully outlines the result of the discussion among those present. It reads:

"That it is desirable to organize an association similar to the London National Sunday League for promoting healthy and innocent recreation on Sundays, and to oppose tyrannical and restrictive legislation regarding Sunday, and it is felt that recent legislation on this subject has been carried too far, interfering with individual liberty to an extent unknown in any other country under the British flag. That this association be called Rational Sunday League, and that its declared objects be: To promote rational Sunday recreation, to secure the opening of picture galleries, museums and reading rooms on Sundays, to provide music on Sunday afternoons in the parks or other convenient places, to obtain legislation allowing a charge to be made for popular Sunday lectures or concerts, and to oppose restrictive legislation regarding Sunday observance."

BRITISH IMMIGRANTS

SOME OF THE NEWCOMERS NO GAIN TO CANADA AT ALL.

Mr. Adams Makes Some Suggestions For Bettering Our Immigration Service — Fresh Arrivals Prefer Town to Country Life—Will Not Go On the Farms—Not Sufficient Attention Paid to Rural Districts.

In the current number of the Empire Review Mr. Gerald Adams, who was a delegate from the Canterbury Chamber of Commerce to the Congress of Chambers held in Montreal in 1903, makes some excellent suggestions for the bettering of our immigration service in the United Kingdom. He has evidently given careful study to the question, for he is not misled by the increase in our British immigrants into any false estimates of the real gain to this country. The saying that in numbers there is strength may be questioned when it is applied to some of the swarms that have come across the sea to recruit our population.

Are a Minus Quantity.

Scores of thousands of these newcomers are a minus quantity instead of a gain, a weakness rather than a strength to Canada. In the West, where we want tillers of the soil, the acreage under cultivation has by no means expanded commensurately with the population. But there has been a very striking increase in the number of inhabitants of the towns and cities of the Western interior provinces. A very large proportion of the immigrants from the Western States and from Northern Europe went on the soil, but the people from Southern Europe and many from the United Kingdom preferred life in the towns and cities. If all were productively engaged there they would be a source of wealth to the country only second in value to the farming class.

Many Undesirables.

But in the towns of the West as well as those of the East the exceptionally good times we have enjoyed for years afford opportunities for hangers-on and parasites who contribute nothing to the country's output. Mr. Adams does not deal with the distribution of the population in our West, but he sees clearly enough that among the people arriving in Canada from the British Isles there are too many "undesirables," men fit neither morally nor physically to be admitted into the population of this country, loafers and whiners, who would do no good anywhere. In the opinion of Mr. Adams, one reason for the percentage of this element being so large is that the rural districts of Britain are practically ignored by our immigration agents, nearly all of whose efforts are exerted through city offices.

Go to Rural Districts.

Naturally, therefore, it is from the cities we get far the greater part of our immigrants. Mr. Adams is convinced that the British rural districts would furnish us exactly the kind of useful immigrants we want if the means of learning something about Canada were put in their way. He says that men brought up to agricultural pursuits, and with savings amounting to from £100 to £500, abound in the United Kingdom where so small a capital is of little help to them. With their training, their small accumulations of cash and their wives, daughters, and sisters schooled in the household duties of farming, Englishmen of that type established on homesteads in Canada would be able to improve their lot immeasurably, and would be a real acquisition to the country.

Cheap Farms In West.

In our West, as Mr. Adams truly remarks, such an agriculturist would be able to buy a farm, already broken up, for a sum equal to about two years' rent of a property of similar size in England. But the British small farmer, who has nothing to look forward to but hard work and more onerous conditions, knows little or nothing about the grand opportunities of this country. Our immigration agents do not give him their attention. They find it easier to work in the thickly-settled towns. Mr. Adams advises that the Dominion Government establish agencies in the heart of each rural district. "A smart man," he says, "with his heart in his work and the bump of organization properly developed, could accomplish wonders in emigration propaganda."

Canada and the West Indies.

In reference to the recent visit of the Canadian Board of Trade delegation to the West Indies, the Georgetown (Demerara) Argosy says: Although the visit of the delegates from Canada was even shorter than was originally feared, yet it was surprising how much interchange of opinion and mutual enlightenment was achieved in the time. One worthy son of the Dominion for instance is now convinced from the evidence of his own eyes that the inhabitants of Georgetown wear clothes. Before leaving Halifax he had his doubts. Another is satisfied that his conception of British Guiana as steeped in the calm stagnation of the middle ages was wrong; and he very fairly admits that in some matters—small, they may be—requiring intelligent enterprise and commercial acumen, Canada has perhaps a hint or two to take from the West Indies. It is pleasant to hear these things. It brings us all more to a level and makes talking so much easier. It is difficult to keep up conversation with a man on a pedestal. On the other hand, our visitors gave us a lesson in businesslike discussion.

Perpetual.

"Well, how is your love affair progressing?"

"I've been told that I may hope."

"Indeed? That's everything."

"Well—er—she doesn't seem to think it's anything but hope."

A Mean Retort.

"He said he would die for me."

"He must be dead easy."

In the Wild East.

The courtesies of journalism in Nova Scotia are pre-eminent. Thus we find The New Glasgow Chronicle referring to The Pictou Standard in these endearing terms. "A friend, who is not careful as to what he reads, tells us that The Standard's zoological specimen of the musteline carnivores of the genus Mephitis and allied genera, the variety known as Mephitis Americano or common skunk, is again on the rampage. This is the time of year they generally make their appearance from the hiding places under old barns, and should be chased back with a shotgun if necessary; they are a menace to the public health."

A Better Sign.

The bluebird have its fun;
I'll watch the maple tree instead
When sap begins to run.

THE INTELLIGENCER BINDERY

HONEYMOON IN PRISON.

English Bride of a Foreigner Subjected to Many Indignities.

The peril to which the English girl who marries a foreigner exposes herself is illustrated by the pathetic case of Signora Andalo, formerly Miss Nellie Penberton, an assistant in a cigar shop in the West End of London. Her husband was arrested in Brussels on March 3 on a charge of thefts of jewelry and on suspicion of being the assailant of Miss Low, the English nurse, who in January last was the victim of a brutal assault in a train in the Mont Cenis tunnel.

Andalo and his wife were on their honeymoon when the arrest was made, and both were imprisoned and kept apart. She was kept for nearly 12 hours without food on the first day of her imprisonment, and underwent all the degrading processes of measurement, photography, etc., to which criminals are subjected. She was only discharged after two dreary weeks of solitary confinement in a cell. Unable to speak French, she could not even exchange a word with her warder.

When she was released she was allowed to visit her husband in jail, and informed him, to his great surprise, of the charges against him. Andalo was suddenly released only to be hurried over the Dutch frontier, whither his wife is following him. Their money is exhausted, and she has not at present the $25 necessary to secure admission as an alien to her native country, where, however, she intends to return.

During the examination which preceded her release the magistrate asked her whether she knew anything of her husband's career. It appears that in his youth he was the associate of Italian anarchists, this being the reason why he has been deported from Belgium. She replied that she knew nothing of Andola's history. The magistrate observed: "That is how English girls get into trouble. They marry foreigners without knowing anything of their past history."

To Visit England.

Among the visitors from India this season will be Prabhashankar D. Pattani, the most prominent statesman of the day in that part of India which is known as the principality of Kathiawad. He holds the responsible post of Prime Minister in the State of Bhavnagar, which has often been classed with Mysore as "the model States" of India.

Among his principal achievements in office have been successful measures of relief in coping with two famines, the launching of the first external loan by any Indian State for other purposes than railway construction, and the opening of the only port along the western coast of India, between Bombay and Kurrachee. In some countries work like this would have brought the doer a crop of decorations, but Mr. Pattani has only the satisfaction of having gained the confidence of his Prince and the esteem and gratitude of the people who have benefited by his administration.

Mr. Pattani is a profound thinker on Indian problems, and writes and speaks English with fluency and distinction. In his picturesque costume he will be a striking figure at official and social entertainments this year.

Officers to Manchuria.

The Chronicle says: Manchuria has taken the place of France—that is to say, instead of visiting the battlefields of 1870, our staff officers are now going to make a study of the still more terrible battlefields of 1904-5; at least, as far as the Indian Government is concerned. In his introduction to the English version of the German history of the Franco-German war, General Maurice complains that this had become too much of a fetish with our military students, and that we had consequently suffered from the idolatry in South Africa.

Lord Kitchener seems to be of the same opinion, as he has decided to despatch twenty staff officers to study the Manchuria campaign on the spot. It is not, perhaps, generally realized that we owe the invaluable "Soldier's Scrap Book" of Sir Ian Hamilton, which we reviewed the other day, to the fact that he was the military agent of the Indian Government in Manchuria.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. MARY V. GRICE.

Director Mothers and Children's Building at Jamestown Exposition.

A place where children can run about and play in safety; where babies may be left and carefully tended; where tired women, weary with sightseeing, may rest and be refreshed; where thoughtful mothers may learn things of vital importance to their own and their children's welfare—this is the Mothers and Children's building at the Jamestown exposition. No other exposition has ever had a building like this. It is unique.

The structure is a modest looking affair; but, although a cottage, it is roomy and well fitted up in basement and two stories. A long, broad veranda runs across the north side inclosed in glass windows, which will be opened and removed in hot weather.

The entire management of the building has been turned over by the exposition authorities into the hands of the National Congress of Mothers, which has appointed Mrs. Mary van Meter Grice of Philadelphia (its national corresponding secretary), to be director of the work.

Mrs. Grice is a clubwoman and church worker. Winsome, able and gracious, she is finely equipped for the position. She was formerly a teacher. Missionary work, religious education, Sabbath observance and the co-operation of school and home are the efforts to which she has given her activities without stint. Her plans for the mothers and children's work at the exposition are very comprehensive. They include day nursery, kindergarten, playroom and pure food luncheon for the children, for whom seven attendants are provided—three kindergartners and four nurses. Admission is free.

The mothers have a separate section at the east end of the building. A reading room with books on child training, a rest room and an assembly room are provided. Daily conferences are arranged when experts will deliver addresses, followed by discussions. The different state presidents preside at the building for a period each during the season, and special days are set apart for observance by each state.

Make Yourself Comfortable.

One of the first rules for warding off nerve storms is to make oneself as comfortable as possible when at work; a second is to ignore what one cannot have; a third persistently to push aside unpleasant recollections and to take up some vigorous exercise or to sing and sing and sing until the tendency has fled.

Very often when sewing a woman will sit in a chair two inches too high for her, just enough to necessitate a strain upon the toes and calf muscles. Again, the article most needed will be farthest away. The spool, instead of being placed where it cannot fall, is put upon a little ledge, from which it drops at every opportunity in the most provoking manner. Let us therefore seek first for comfort and convenience. Let us not make anything "do" if better can be obtained.

One way, for instance, of guarding against these sewing troubles is to have a sewing screen. Thus everything is in its wonted place, and ordinary neatness will keep it there. In fact, "a place for everything and everything in its place" is a good rule, even if an old one, for those highly strung individuals who fly to pieces at the least irritation.

The screen mentioned is fully within the capacity of the home carpenter, being simply two painted boards hinged together and supplied with hooks, nails on which to place spools, a capacious bag and two shelves. Its mere possession will ward off many a nerve storm from the busy house mother.

The Ordinary Woman.

The world never heard of her.

She never was fifty miles from home.

She never wore a French hat or had her hair marceled.

She couldn't hold a room spellbound by her conversation.

She will never write a book or paint a picture or inspire great men to mighty destinies. But—

She is one of the truest heroines that ever breathed.

She has been disappointed in the man she loved and loves him yet.

She has nursed him and his children through days and years of tedious illness.

She has borne with poverty and suffered privations and neglect and in every instance done the best she could.

She has worked beyond her strength, early and late, has given all cheerfully and asks nothing in return.

All this she has endured has been borne silently, with no whimperings and no whinings at fate.

And to the very end, though wrinkled and gray in appearance, she has kept sweet and serene in heart and strong in her faith in goodness.

Yes, she is only an ordinary, commonplace woman, and the world is full of her, but wherever she lives there dwells a heroine. She has never asserted herself, it is true, but through self sacrifice she has realized herself and lived the biggest sort of life.

Washing Embroidered Pieces.

It is inadvisable to put embroidered pieces in the regular wash. They should be washed by themselves in a suds made of any pure white soap with warm, not hot, water. Rub the linen as little as possible, but squeeze thoroughly, and when clean rinse in several waters to remove all soapsuds. Lay the piece between two linen cloths and squeeze again until most of the moisture has been absorbed. When ironing, put on the board a piece of thick soft flannel and over this a white muslin cloth. Lay the embroidery on this with the right side down, cover again with a piece of white muslin to prevent scorching and press quickly with a perfectly clean iron.

Sickroom "Don'ts."

Don't appear anxious, however great your anxiety.

Don't be unmindful of yourself if you are in the responsible position of nurse. To do faithful work you must have proper food and stated hours of rest.

Don't forget that kindness and tenderness are needful to successful nursing. Human nature longs to be soothed and comforted on all occasions when it is out of tune, says Woman's Life.

Don't permit currents of air to blow upon the patient. An open fireplace is an excellent means of ventilation. The current may be tested by burning a piece of paper in front.

For Old Mahogany.

To restore color to mahogany the following preparation has been used with excellent results:

Add half an ounce of alkanet root, cut into small bits, to a pint of linseed oil, and when the mixture has stood for a week add half an ounce of powdered gum arabic and one ounce of shellac varnish.

Let these stand in a bottle near a heated stove for a week, then strain. Wash the wood with slightly soapy water, rinse, wipe dry and polish with the preparation, using soft wool or a chamois skin.

Sowing Seeds In Open Ground.

Sowings may be made at intervals of two and three weeks from early May until middle of June for late flowers, sowing early and late sorts. The soil should be rich and well crumbled and with wood ashes, soot or finely pulverized lime dusted in the rows and well mixed in to prevent disease. A covering of thin muslin stretched on short stakes prevents the soil from baking. Keep the ground well stirred, but not deep enough to injure surface roots.

To Save Potatoes.

Wash potatoes thoroughly and then remove a narrow ring of skin right around from top to bottom, leaving the sides covered. Boil or steam the potatoes as usual, and when cooked take off the left on skin. It will be easily done, hardly anything will be thrown away, the nourishment of the potatoes will be retained, and the trouble of paring them will be nil.

For New Floors.

To stain new floors, first brush over with a fairly weak solution of glue and water. When the floor is quite dry, take two ounces of permanganate of potash and dissolve in a half gallon of boiling water. Brush this over the part to be stained. If not quite dark enough, give a second coat. Let it dry again and polish with beeswax and turpentine.

Carefully Chosen Handy Pins.

Too much jewelry or cheap jewelry is in bad taste. But the pin that holds the collar neatly at the back, the little pins for securing the cuffs, if chosen with an artistic eye, can so bring out or heighten the color notes of the dress or hat as to lend an air of individuality and charm to the dress far in excess of their cost.

New Ironing Boards.

Ironing boards have one end covered with zinc, with edges slightly raised at three sides. This serves as an iron stand and saves the laundress the labor of lifting the iron to and from the board every time she pauses to adjust her work—a small thing, it is true, but it tells at the end of a long day.

To Improve Vinegar.

That cider vinegar which is flat and lacks the sharp taste which makes it desirable for pickles or salad may be improved by adding a level tablespoonful of cream of tartar per gallon and then allowed to stand for three or four weeks.

The water in which cabbage or onions have been boiled should be allowed to become cool before it is poured down the sink. This precaution will avoid an unpleasant odor in the kitchen.

Remember that the gravy will not be so apt to be lumpy if the pan is removed from the fire while the thickening is being stirred in.

EUREKA!

Yes, I Have Found It at Last.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me.—ELDER JOHN T. ONGLEY, Footville, Pa. For sale by all Druggists.

When a girl objects to being kissed it's a sure sign that the wrong fellow is trying to break into the game.

You can make almost any man nervous by telling him that a policeman was asking about him.

OUR MANNERISMS.

Traits We Own That Are Annoying to Our Friends.

It may be only a way of speaking, a way of looking or some little mannerism that offends.

Of course one doesn't always realize the results caused by doing things "our way," but that doesn't excuse us.

Think out how you look when you tell something disagreeable which is unnecessary and uncalled for.

Think out if often you don't try the patience of your friends with a continued history of your ways and weakness and whether, after awhile, it does not take the form of nagging.

And even from those we love nagging is something very difficult to bear. A great sin is often forgotten, but these continual little annoyances, these continual disagreeable mannerisms and the insisting of doing things always in your own way, these little "queernesses," are just as wrong as the greater sins of people who have greater temptations.

Many a boy has drifted from home and happiness on account of a nagging, suspicious mother, his future ruined.

Who is to blame?

Many a girl has turned down the primrose pathway of vice for lack of some kind little word of appreciation. Some sickening influence has often driven far apart those who should be very near together.

It may not be "your way" to speak these little words of appreciation or to do the considerate, helpful, aspiring things.

But is that an excuse?

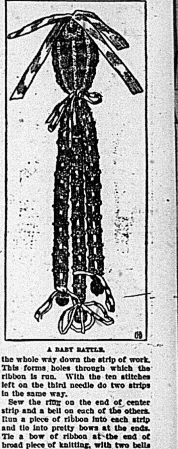
Why not cultivate it?

Don't you think your ways and little queernesses are just as wrong as the greater sins of people who daily have to meet the greater temptations?

A CROCHETED RATTLE.

Pretty and Harmless Plaything For the Baby.

Cast on fifteen stitches, first row plain, second row purl, third row plain, fourth row purl, fifth row purl, sixth row plain, seventh row purl and eighth row plain. Repeat these eight rows until twelve ribs are worked. Now put ten stitches on the third needle and work twenty-four ribs on the remaining five stitches and cast off, dropping the middle stitch and letting it run the whole way down the strip of work. This forms holes through which the ribbon is run. With the ten stitches left on the third needle do two strips in the same way.



A BABY RATTLE.

Sew the ring on the end of center strip and a bell on each of the others. Run a piece of ribbon into each strip and tie into pretty bows at the ends. Tie a bow of ribbon at the end of broad piece of knitting, with two bells on the loops. Finish off at the top with a bow of ribbon a little wider and sew a safety pin on the back to fix to the baby's dress.

Dinner Desserts.

Spanish Cream.—One-half box of gelatin, one quart of milk, the yolks of three eggs, one small cup of sugar. Soak the gelatin in the milk for an hour, then put it on the fire and stir well as it heats. Beat the yolks lightly with the sugar. Add to milk and heat to the boiling point, stirring all the time. Strain into a mold and flavor with vanilla.

Trifle.—Take stale cake, cut in small split squares, put whipped cream between and layer of preserved fruit over the top. Cover with cream and fruit. Served with preserved raspberries it is delicious.

Marshmallow Confection.—One-half pound of English walnuts chopped fine and added to a pound of marshmallows cut up. Mix these together. Take a pint of cream and whip it until stiff. Stir into it the nuts and marshmallows; also a quarter of a cup of candied cherries chopped fine. Flavor with a few drops of vanilla. Set on the ice an hour or two before serving.

A Hint to the Cook.

When making pastry, leave the edges quite untouched. The air in the paste causes the flakes, so it must not be pressed out. This rule holds good when making all kinds of pastry.

ANOTHER NEW INSTRUMENT.

We have added to our optical parlor "the DeZeng's Luminous Retinoscope and Opthalmoscope." We have used the old forms of these instruments with the light from an outside source, which is difficult to get right position, as well as sometimes poor illumination. This instrument has the light in itself (electric dry cell) and gives a beautiful and clear view of the retina with the optic nerve and blood vessels, etc., of the eye, also a clear shadow for the "Shadow Test," and one can have the light instantly in any position desirable. Call and see how it works in testing your own eyes. Free of charge.

Reception At High School Last Night.

MASTER MAURICE LAVOIE WAS PRESENTED WITH GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S MEDAL.

A reception under the auspices of the teachers and pupils of the High School was held in the school rooms last evening. Many parents, School Trustees and others were in attendance, and all appeared to enjoy themselves. The assembly room and adjoining room were thrown into one, making an excellent place for such a function. The teachers and scholars of the Reception committee were on hand to extend a hearty welcome to the guests of the evening. The room looked beautiful, being tastefully decorated with flags, bunting and lighted Chinese lanterns.

Whilst the audience was gathering an orchestra composed of Misses Jean Sinclair, Jennie Cunnington, Olive Cooper, Edna Wallace and Messrs. T. Cushing and G. Berkley, discoursed music.

At the hour of 8.30 a short programme, consisting of vocal and instrumental music and recitations was carried out. The soloists were, Misses Flossie Moon, and Jean Shanks and Messrs. E. F. Milburn, J. Hayes and H. McKay, all of whom rendered selections which were much appreciated. A trio composed of Miss Grace Shanks, and Messrs. Milburn and McKay, rendered a number very acceptably. Piano solos were given by Miss Ruby Milburn and Mr. E. Geen. A recitation by Miss Tessa McPherson delighted all present.

At the conclusion of the programme, Rev. A. L. Geen, after complimenting the children upon the entertainment provided, called upon Mr. Maurice Lavoie and presented him with the Governor-General's medal, which he won two years ago. The Rev. gentleman complimented the young man upon the success which attended his efforts. The young man during the remainder of the evening wore the medal upon his breast, and it was admired by all who saw it. The medal is presented yearly to the youngest scholar making the highest marks in the entrance examinations.

Before dispersing all present were served with dainty refreshments which had been provided by the young ladies of the school.

Mining Man Disappears.

Madoc Review: Many inquiries are being made relative to the disappearance of Mr. E. B. Davis, a well-known mining man, who has been carrying on operations in the vicinity of Bannockburn until recently. On Feb. 26th he left his hotel, the St. Lawrence Hall, to go on an inspection tour of the Richardson mine at Eldorado, and that was the last seen of him. Before leaving he left with Mr. Cockram, the proprietor of the hotel, a large diamond, and told him to keep it till his return, as he might lose it at the mine. Some letters and other things were also left in his room. Mr. Cockram is very anxious about him, and asks that information regarding the missing man be sent to him, at the St. Lawrence Hall, Madoc. There are no reasons why he should have left these parts without a moment's notice, as he left all his effects at his mines at Bannockburn. Mr. Davis is a man with sharp features, about 6 feet tall, about 56 years of age and his hair is quite gray.

A Barn Burned.

At a late hour on Thursday night a barn belonging to Mr. Robert Goodfellow, situated in the 8th concession of Tyendinaga township, was destroyed by fire, with its contents. When seen the flames had made considerable progress, and nothing could be saved. It is surmised that the fire was caused by tramps, as a couple were in that vicinity in the early part of the evening. The barn contained some farming implements and grain. The building was insured for $200 and the contents for $300 in the Liverpool, London & Globe. The loss will be considerably in excess of the insurance.

About Miss Haggarty

The Brockville Times has this to say of Miss Eva Haggarty, whose disappearance was noted yesterday:—

"The Miss Haggarty referred to is a daughter of Albert Haggarty, of the Prescott road. She went from here about a year ago, to Boston, Mass, and from there to Philadelphia. She is suffering from an ailment which has caused her relative and friends much anxiety for some time and which possibly accounts for her strange actions."

Becoming Fewer

Running a newspaper is just like running a hotel only different, says an exchange. When a man goes into a hotel and finds something on the table which does not suit him he does not raise hades with the landlord and tell him to stop his hotel. Well hardly. He sets that dish to one side and wades into the many dishes that suit him. It is different with some newspaper readers. They find an article occasionally that does not suit them exactly and without stopping to think it may please other hundreds of other readers, make a grand stand play and tell the editor how his paper should be run and what should be put into it and what would have been better left out, that certain statements were too strong and too personal, and while the statements were perfectly true, they should have been left out. But such people are becoming fewer every year.

It is unlucky to some home...

LARDER LAKE GOLD.

BLUE BELL PUSHING AHEAD.

New Liskeard, Ont., April 26.—The Larder Lake stampede still continues and is growing from day to day. Excitement runs high owing to the statements and reports from mining engineers and miners coming out of the wonderful finds and strikes made in that district.

The Blue Bell Company started two large crews of men from here to-day with complete outfits for establishing camps and commencing active development, preparatory to installing twelve stamp mills upon their properties, which are reported to be marvellously rich. It is claimed this company will be the first to send out gold, and that the results will astonish the outside world.

Claims Belleville An His Residence

A despatch from Windsor says: Earl Seeley, who claims Belleville as his place of residence, was arrested at South Woodslee by Provincial Detective Campeau on a forgery charge. He passed a bad check on a local grocery a short time ago, and has been working merchants, hotel men and others in this section. When here he claimed to be a relative of Rev. L. S. Hughson, Baptist minister. He appeared before Magistrate Bartlett and admitted his guilt, claiming he had a confederate who forged the checks, while he passed them, and was remanded for a week.

He Just Blew In.

TOWN OF HASTINGS HAD FUNNY EXPERIENCE WITH A TRAVELLING BOUNDER.

The Hastings Star has the following story: Last week a Scotchman named Rust, supposed to be from the vicinity of Fenelia, blew into town wearing a summer straw hat and overcoat, with checks of extraordinary size, and proceeded to sell Cobalt mining stock. Whether he sold much stock or not we are not prepared to say, but he was also on the buy.

On Friday he bargained for one of Alex Greenley's best horses, but fortunately, Mr. Greenley was not to deliver the horse till the money was forthcoming. As he had purchased a horse, on his way down to the stable he passed Al. Chapman's, and seeing a new buggy in front he bought it at once in the same way as he had bought the horse, the only difference being that he gave a cheque in part payment, which Mr. Chapman didn't seem to think was much good, and the deal fell through. A little later, on looking for a dog that he was supposed to own, he was told by someone that the dog was down at Ed. Lynch's shop, and he at once repaired there and accused Edward of having his dog. Of course, Ed. had not seen his dog, and told him so, but Mr. Rust couldn't see it that way and roundly abused Ed. for keeping the animal, finally holding his fist under the constable's nose and telling what he would do to him. Just about then Mr. Rust started for the lock-up. After cooling his heels in the cells for a few minutes, he was allowed to go on condition that he left town, and the last seen of him he was only touching the high spots on the road to Roseneath.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

PAINTING THE TOWN.

There was a good house at the Carman last night, the attraction being "Painting the Town." The production, which is magnificently staged, is brimful of comedy, jokes and amusing situations, though the company was not so large as on its former appearance. The singing is bright and catchy, while the dancing was decidedly clever. The two leading actors, Messrs. Leonard and Halliday, in the parts of "Hogan" and "Bregin" were the merrymakers of the evening and are both well adapted to the Irish role. A feature which is well worth noticing was the singing and dancing of Miss Mazie King. The young lady is graceful and has a fine voice. The descriptive pieces, the ensemble and special numbers were all striking and attractive and greeted by enthusiastic applause. "Painting the Town" is one of the best productions that has been presented to the theatre-going public of Belleville for some time.

Regimental Parade.

The Fifteenth Regiment had a fairly good parade last night, with Lt. Col Stewart in command. The men marched to the Hospital lot by way of the east hill, the Regimental band furnishing music which was very favorably commented on. A large number of spectators braved the raw air and watched the men at drill.

Golden Wedding of Rev. A. & Mrs Martin

PLEASING AND RARE EVENT CELEBRATED IN THIS CITY YESTERDAY.

A pleasing and rare event occurred in this city yesterday, being the golden wedding of Rev. A. and Mrs. Martin. On April 26, 1857, Mr. A. Martin was married to Miss Spencer, who was a daughter of a veteran of 1812. Rev. Mr. Martin is now 75 and his wife 72. Mr. Martin was received into the Methodist ministry 46 years ago, half of that time being spent in Hastings county. Nine years ago Rev. and Mrs. Martin came to Belleville, and have since been accorded the respect and esteem due a worthy and lovable couple. Rev. Mr. Martin, during his ministry, occupied no less than 130 different pulpits, principally in Hastings and Prince Edward counties.

Yesterday afternoon and evening the golden wedding anniversary was celebrated, and the occasion was a very joyous one. The family residence, on Charlotte St., was beautifully decorated, the drawing-room in pink and white and the dining-room in gold and white. No less than 25 letters and telegrams of congratulations were received. Guests present from out of town were: Rev. J. R. and Mrs. Real, of Napanee; Mr. and Mrs. John English, Napanee; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Martin, Moscow; Rev. Thos and Mrs. Hambly, and son Arthur, of Gambier, O., the latter gentleman being a son-in-law.

Those assisting in the parlor and dining-room were Mesdames A. Campbell, R. H. Leitch, J. R. Real, P. F. Canniff, W. J. Magrath, B. Haines; Misses M. Herbert, E. Gardiner, M. Baker, Sara and Lena McCrudden, Blanche McMurray, Minnie Dulmage, Goldie Adams, Sabra Bonisteel, Edna Perley.

A very enjoyable time was spent by those present. In the afternoon there was a programme and addresses by Rev. A. Campbell, Mr. Wm. Johnson and Rev. Dr. Gardiner, and in the evening Rev. Messrs. Leitch, Wilson, Dr. Dyer, Hambly and Campbell spoke, Miss Baker gave a recitation and Mr. Jas. Dyer a solo.

The presents were numerous and beautiful, showing the esteem in which the aged couple are held. They were as follows: Onyx clock and $35 in gold from Holloway St. church congregation; Methodist ministers, $25 in gold; Rev. Mr. English, a $10 gold piece; gold-headed cane and umbrella from Rev. T. and Mrs. Hambly and son Arthur; clocks from Mr. and Mrs. Magrath and Rev. and Mrs. Real, together with many other remembrances of books, silverware, etc.

A feature of the occasion was the reading of an original poem by Rev. Thomas Hambly, son-in-law, formerly of this district, some specimen verses of which follow:

BEAUTIFUL BELLEVILLE!

'Tis said that church and college hall,
Are fruitful in engagement.
He marries well who meets at all,
His spouse on such a pavement.

We're glad you've found this beauty spot
On Quinte situated,
Where clergy who have roamed the earth,
Are full appreciated.

The folk of your peculiar sect,
Are here in full round numbers;
Civic pride prevails and graft is checked,
By aldermanic wonders.

Oh! lovely queen on Quinte's shores,
Bejewelled with hills and waters,
Young princes own your shops and stores,
The world seeks out your daughters.

Your colleges send out their light,
Resplendent in their lustre;
Old Bridge St. Church, inspiring sight,
An army could she muster.

Her sons have gone to all the earth,
With high forensic teaching;
The vernal powers that gave them birth
Were classics law and preaching.

We give the cheer Belleville to thee,
The sweetest place in story,
Your palace home and cottage free,
Doth weave your crown of glory.

They've sown in spring, and toiled in summer;
They scorned the thought of rest;
God's hand hath tied the golden band,
May joy possess their breast.

OPENED BY PRESIDENT

The Ter-Centennial Exhibition at Jamestown Inaugurated.

Great Pomp and Ceremony Marked the Function—Naval Review Was An Impressive Sight—Dull Weather Marred Opening—Many Buildings Are Not Ready—British Warships Take Part.

Norfolk, Va., April 27.—The Jamestown Ter-Centennial Exposition — a land and water display such as never before was attempted in this country or on foreign shores—was opened yesterday with that pomp and ceremony which always attend an event where the President of the United States is a central figure and diplomatic representatives of foreign nations, governors of States and like dignitaries are honored guests and participants.

President Roosevelt reviewed from the deck of the yacht-cruiser Mayflower the war vessels anchored in Hampton Roads. He reached Discovery Landing, having been transferred in a naval launch from his yacht, shortly before noon, and amid applause from the thousands gathered to voice their welcome, he was received by the exposition management.

Then followed the program for opening to the public the enterprise commemorating the 300th anniversary of the first English settlement in America.

Salute of 300 Guns.

At sunrise the ceremonies were begun by the United States artillery firing a salute of 300 guns to usher in the day. This was a signal for the trend of humanity to railroad trains, street cars and boat lines, which from that moment poured people into the grounds.

It was some minutes before President Roosevelt could proceed with his address. The people repeatedly gave vent to their enthusiasm. As he pressed the gold button, which formally opened the Exposition, it was the signal for the unfurling of a thousand or more flags on the various buildings. At the same time a signal was given to the warships, and to the garrison at Fort Monroe, and all fired a salute. When the echoes of the last gun died away all of the bands on the Exposition grounds played the "Star Spangled Banner," the troops presenting arms, and all persons present baring their heads.

After the review the naval detachment returned to the vessels and the army detachments went to camp Captain John Smith, the post at the Exposition grounds.

Pressed the Button.

The pressing of a button in connection with the opening of an exposition was not so important a function in itself as has been expected. On account of the unreadiness of the buildings and the grounds, there was little machinery to set in motion, and many of the buildings had not been supplied with flags to be unfurled. The coldest and most backward spring in the annals of Virginia, marked by severe rainstorms in the past month, is responsible for the opening ceremonies being marred by incompleted structures and uninstalled machinery. May 15 has been fixed as the day when the directors hope to be able to open all features of the show.

The day opened cloudy, but by 8 o'clock the sun shone forth and a strong breeze from the southeast soon drove the cloud banks beyond the horizon, leaving a clear sky. The breezes sweeping across Hampton Roads also tempered the heat, which had a tinge of mid-Summer in it by the time the President landed on the Exposition grounds.

President Was Early.

Norfolk, Va., April 27.—The Mayflower, bearing the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and party, arrived at the head of the column of war vessels yesterday morning almost an hour before the usual call for quarters. The American flagship Connecticut, Rear-Admiral Evans commanding, boomed out the first guns of the Presidential salute, the other American ships and the foreign vessels immediately following.

The Mayflower headed toward Norfolk, passing along the outer line of foreign ships, the crews of which were drawn up in close order along the forward and upper decks and superstructure and stood at attention.

The first of the British ships encountered was the Roxburgh, then the Hampshire, and next the Argyll. President Roosevelt was especially interested in the flagship Good Hope, and exchanged personal salutes with Admiral Noville, who stood on the bridge.

The Good Hope, together with the German Imperial flagship Roon, were assigned berths to the right and left of the Connecticut. These three flagships formed a triangle, where the Mayflower at the end of the review dropped anchor. The President received the flag officers of the American and foreign warships, who then proceeded to the Exposition grounds. The President, in a small launch, followed.

Civil War Veteran Dead.

He was a native of Ontario, born at Lansdowne in 1832.

TOWN IN HANDS OF MOB

Police Fired and Wounded Several of the Rioters.

Shops In Castries Wrecked—Market Looted and Persons Beaten—Merchants Compelled to Yield to the Demands of the Crowd—Coal Carriers Won Strike—Sugar Estates Burned—All Coaling Stopped.

New York, April 27.—A despatch from Castries, Island of St. Lucia, says:—The speech of the new British Governor having been construed as encouraging to the aspirations of the workmen, the coal carriers organized an agitation for a big advance in wages and struck work. They intimidated all who were willing to work and were joined by the rabble. All coaling was stopped.

There is here only a small police force, inadequate to repress disorder or to protect property. Being pressed by the rioters they fired on the crowd and wounded four persons. The police and special officers were confined to their barracks and the town was left in the hands of the mob. Several shops were wrecked, the market was looted and several persons were beaten.

The general public was not molested. The coal carriers formulated their demands and the merchants were compelled to yield. The advance in wages is considered ruinous, but work has been resumed. Castries is now quiet.

News of the burning and wrecking of sugar estates is now coming from the country. Armed police are preventing rioters coming into the town.

HE WARMED THE DYNAMITE.

Samuel Johnson Blown to Pieces Near Rochester.

Rochester, N. Y., April 27.—Samuel Johnson, aged 55 years, of Millville, was killed by an explosion of dynamite yesterday, his body being blown to pieces. Johnson had been employed blowing up stumps and rocks for various farmers. Yesterday morning he was in a barn warming dynamite for the day's work, when a terrific explosion, which was plainly heard in Medina, occurred, wrecking the barn and setting it on fire. A horse and a cow were blown through the side of the barn and killed. Johnson's body was badly burned in the fire, which destroyed the barn. He leaves a wife and daughter in Lockport.

Disappearance of Mrs. McKay Is Now Cleared Up.

Southampton, April 27.—Search parties yesterday afternoon found the body of Mrs. John McKay in a swamp two miles north of here. Last Saturday morning Mrs. McKay wandered away from the home of her son, D. N. McKay, and until yesterday search parties were unable to find her. Mrs. McKay was over eighty years of age. She evidently lost her way and perished with the cold.

She had only set out for the Orient when the disease was discovered, and she turned about and went into quarantine, where she will have to wait for some days yet. There was a large party of tea buyers on board, bound for China and Japan.

WROTE "ICHABOD" ON TEMPLE.

Strangers Disfigured Sacred Edifice In London.

London, April 27.—Passers-by were astonished yesterday morning to see the word "Ichabod" (the glory is departed from Israel), in glaring letters 18 inches high, over the portico of the City Temple. It had evidently been written by a skilled hand as the letters were perfectly formed and spaced. Persons not aware of the significance of the word thought that it was merely a new decoration and passed on.

Eventually somebody sufficiently curious found the Temple caretaker and enquired why the word was on the portico. The caretaker, who until then was not aware of its presence, promptly obtained a ladder and washed the letters off.

A subsequent investigation revealed that two well dressed men, with a long ladder, had inscribed the word early in the morning. Nobody interfered with them, it being assumed that they were orthodox Christians, who, saddened by Dr. Campbell's heresy, conceived it to be their duty to fulfil the invocation of the late pastor of the church, Dr. Parker, who on a memorable occasion declaimed from the pulpit of the Temple: "Should it ever come to pass that the great truths of Christ's death and resurrection be denied by any future occupier of the pulpit, or should the fact of His gracious Godhead and Divinity be questioned, may the word Ichabod be written over the doors of the City Temple."

KILLS GIRL IN SUGAR BUSH.

Young German Murders His Sweetheart—Jealousy the Cause.

Parry Sound, April 27.—Frank Varasko shot and killed Renny Supelsea, a 15-year-old girl in a sugar bush near the village of Arnstein, and then committed suicide. Jealousy was the cause.

In a farm house near Arnstein lived an old couple, named Supelsea, a 15-year-old daughter of the husband, and a son of the woman by a former marriage named Frank Varasko.

Varasko had been paying or trying to pay his respects to the girl and was jealous of her speaking to or being seen with any of the other young men of the neighborhood. Varasko and a number of other young men of the place had been drinking rather heavily for some time.

The tragedy occurred at about 5 o'clock Monday evening. The girl was employed in a sugar bush boiling sap. After the finding of the body of the girl search was made for Varasko by C. K. Arthurs, J.P., and Anton Wagner, and his body was found a short distance away in the woods.

The old couple, the father of the girl, and the mother of the young man, were both confined to their beds by illness at the time of the tragedy. The parties are all Germans and members of considerable settlements in that vicinity.

HOPE FOR READJUSTMENT.

Newfoundland Fisheries Under Discussion With Lord Elgin.

St. John's, Nfld., April 27.—The Colonial Government officials here say that Sir Robert Bond's conference in London Wednesday with Lord Elgin regarding the American fisheries question was only the first of a series of discussions, which it is hoped will result in the adjustment of the entire matter.

Premier Bond is in telegraphic communication with his Ministers, who will consider whatever proposals are made to him, and suggest such amendments as seem desirable.

The officials here expect that the negotiations will be protracted, and that a solution of the question will be difficult on account of the firm stand taken by Newfoundland and the conciliatory attitude of the British Cabinet towards the United States.

FOLDING BED NEAR FATAL.

Man and Wife Doubled Up and Near Strangled.

Hamilton, O., April 27.—While two patrolmen were passing the residence of Charles Hunter yesterday they heard, faintly, sounds of distress inside the house. An investigation revealed Mr. and Mrs. Hunter almost strangled and crushed and lacerated within a collapsed folding bed.

The bed had closed like a pair of shears, doubling up the occupants, half-suffocating them, and stifling their cries. They were in great agony, and were with difficulty extricated from the clutches of the bed, where they had been held almost all night.

In Case of Emergency.

Regina, Sask., April 27.—In reference to a statement made by Acting Premier Fielding in the House of Commons Thursday, the best authority is given for stating that the detachment of Mounted Police under Inspector Grant, which left here on Wednesday, for Macleod, was sent out on the requisition of the Federal Government, to be on hand in case of an emergency in the strike, and, further, that another detachment will leave the depot division here to-day for the same purpose.

Fear Smallpox Epidemic.

Brockville, April 27.—The neighborhood surrounding Grovetown, in Edwardsburg Township, is alarmed over an outbreak of smallpox in the home of William Raycroft, whose son has contracted the disease. Until the disease was diagnosed by the medical health officer no precautions were taken and the patient moved among the people thinking he had cold sores.

Famous Scientist Drowned.

Vienna, April 27.—Prof. Albert Ritter Von Mosatig-Moorhof, the famous surgeon and introducer of iodoform, while walking on the bank of the Danube yesterday, fell in the water, and was drowned. It was at first thought he had committed suicide, but enquiries tend to prove that his death was accidental.

Canada May Demand Free Port in Alaska From U. S.

Foreign Secretary to Confer With Sir Wilfrid Laurier On United States Questions—Canadian Negotiations Giving Trouble—Secretary Root Has Widely Different Views—Must Buy Out Sealers.

London, April 29.—Foreign Secretary Grey is taking advantage of the presence of the Colonial Premiers in London to obtain the first-hand views of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert Bond on the questions pending between the United States and Canada and Newfoundland respectively.

The Secretary already has had one conference with Sir Robert, but it was largely taken up with the discussion of the modus vivendi, which the United States and Great Britain signed to cover the last fishing season, and to which the Newfoundland Premier strenuously objected on the ground of "interference with the rights of the colony."

Against Interference.

Further interviews will occur, looking to the permanent settlement of the fisheries dispute. It is recognized that this is not easy of accomplishment, as there is a strong sentiment against any interference of the Imperial Government with the affairs of the colonies.

The Canadian negotiations are giving the Foreign Secretary even more trouble than those in which Newfoundland is interested, but every effort will be put forth to bring about an agreement. Premier Laurier has been too busy thus far with the Imperial Conference and special engagements to discuss questions with the Foreign Office, but he has made an appointment with the Foreign Secretary for the coming week when the whole matter will be gone over.

Sir Wilfrid expressed to the Associated Press his satisfaction with the hands in which the negotiations were left, and spoke hopefully of the outcome, but from other sources it was learned that there are wide differences of views between United States Secretary of State Root and the Canadians.

Demand Compensation.

In almost every case the Canadians demand some national compensation in return for what they are asked to concede. As an example, to give up pelagic sealing they not only ask the United States to buy out the sealers, but also want a further concession from the United States, which might take the form of a port in Alaska to give traders an entry into the Canadian Yukon district without passing through American territory.

At a dinner of the National Liberal Club, Sir Robert Bond took the occasion to again protest against the modus vivendi, repeating what he said in the Legislature before his departure from Newfoundland.

LAURIER IS RESPONSIBLE.

Canadian Premier Killed the Imperial Council Idea.

London, April 29.—The Saturday Review says the proposal of an imperial council has been killed by Premier Laurier with the help of Gen. Botha.

The Spectator says the abandonment of an imperial council was largely due to the line taken by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. Haldane, referring to the conference proposals, thought they had made a step forward towards the organization of a scientific force for the defence of the Empire as a whole.

The Pall Mall Gazette hopes Premier Bond's appeal for Newfoundland will not go unconsidered amid the greater issues of the Premiers' visit.

Dr. Charles Harriss is to be admitted to the Worshipful Co. of Musicians on Tuesday.

Charge Against Minister.

Cayuga, April 29.—The Methodist Church in this town will be the scene of a big trial on Tuesday. The judge will be Rev. R. G. Elliott, of Waterloo, president of the Hamilton conference, and five pastors of this district will constitute the jurors. The main defendant is Rev. J. H. Dyke, the pastor of the church, and against him there are half a dozen charges. Alex. Mitchell, one of the church officials, laid the charges. Rev. Mr. Dyke, in turn, has laid a charge against Rev. Mr. Mathers, Hagersville, the district president. The charges against Rev. Mr. Dyke are defamation of character, falsehood, deceit, mal-administration, indiscreet and disorderly conduct in the church.

Traveler In Trouble.

Toronto, April 29.—J. J. Cummings, a Montreal cigar traveler, was arrested on Saturday night by Detective Tipton, on a warrant from Berlin, Ont., charging him with fraud.

Cummings, it is alleged, undertook to sell a quantity of wine on commission for Weiner Bros. of Berlin. He advised the firm to the effect that he had sold two casks to an Ottawa firm. Weiner Bros. sent him a cheque covering the amount of the commission. When called on for payment, the Ottawa firm denied any knowledge of the transaction.

Cummings will be taken to Berlin to-day.

Two Drowned While Fishing.

Binghamton, N. Y., April 29.—John Kelly and William Lee, while fishing in Otzego Lake Saturday night, were drowned. They started out in their boat, which had a small hole in it, and which gradually filled with water, until it went down.

Commons Prorogues.

Few Were Present at Wind-up Of Session

Earl Grey's References to Work of Parliament--Question of Provincial Subsidies--Revision of Tariff--His Excellency Refers to Postal Changes, Immigrants and the Labor Legislation.

Ottawa, April 29.—A significant feature of Saturday's prorogation was found in the fact that only 45 people were in the gallery and that only about one-half of the Senators' seats (always gallantly surrendered place aux dames) were occupied by the ladies of the smart set.

Although prorogation was announced for 3, it was 3.55 before His Excellency arrived. He read his speech in both French and English, and, as always, spoke with much musical resonance.

His Excellency said:

"Honorable gentlemen of the Senate; gentlemen of the House of Commons:

"In bringing to a close the third session of the tenth Parliament of Canada, I desire to express to you my thanks for the care and assiduity you have shown in the discharge of your important duties, the results of which are apparent in many important acts which must prove of great benefit to the country.

"I am glad to observe that the fiscal period terminating on the last day of March was, in proportion to its length, the most prosperous in the history of the Dominion, and that the present indications are that the expansion of the country's trade and revenue will continue during the year that we are now entering upon; a fact that is particularly gratifying in view of the important undertakings to which Canada is committed.

"The stream of immigrants entering the Dominion continues yearly to expand, and it is very satisfactory to note that a larger number is coming from the British Isles than in former years. The recent revision of the tariff will, it is believed, meet with the general approval of the trade, removing as it does many inequalities heretofore existing.

The Matter of Subsidies.

"One of the most important of the subjects which have engaged your attention is that of the subsidies and allowances to be paid out of the Dominion treasury to the several provinces. I trust that the proposed changes in the imperial legislation respecting which you have adopted an address to His Majesty will, if enacted, go far towards removing the grievances of which the Provincial Governments have complained as to the insufficiency of their revenues.

"The substantial aid now offered towards the establishment of cold storage should stimulate the erection of those necessary adjuncts for the preservation of perishable foods.

"I have observed with gratification the passage of an act having for its object the maintenance of industrial peace in all public utilities. This legislation has already been applied with success. It is confidently expected that when the provisions of the act for the settlement of industrial disputes are fully understood both employes and employers will be ready to refer their differences to boards of investigation and conciliation and thus avoid the evils following strikes and lockouts.

Postal Changes.

"The arrangements lately made between the Imperial and Canadian postal departments, providing for a substantial reduction on newspapers and periodicals coming from the United Kingdom, have, I am glad to know been received with much satisfaction as a measure likely to promote a freer communication between the mother country and Canada.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons, I thank you in His Majesty's name for the liberal supplies you have granted for the public service.

"Honorable gentlemen of the Senate, gentlemen of the House of Commons: In now relieving you from your duties let me express the fervent hope that when we meet again at the next session an equally prosperous condition will prevail throughout Canada, and in the meantime let us not forget to express gratitude to a kind Providence for the many blessings conferred upon our country."

Lords and Commons.

London, April 29.—According to The Daily Telegraph this Government's plan for dealing with conflicts between the House of Lords and the House of Commons will be a proposal that in cases of disagreement both Houses shall sit and vote together, the majority vote of the combined Houses deciding the dispute.

Sends Out Agitators.

Tangier, April 29.—The bandit Raisuli and the pretender, Bu Hamara, have sent out a number of clever semi-religious agitators to foment a revolt against the Sultan, who is accused of having sold Oudja to France. The crusade is likely to result in widespread rebellion.

Turks Clash With Brigands.

Athens, April 29.—A detachment of Turkish troops and a band of Greek brigands had a sharp fight April 26 near Merihoven in Macedonia. The Turks' ultimately routed the raiders. The Greek chief, seven of his men and twenty Turks were killed.

Lad Fatally Injured.

Brockville, April 29.—Rolland Harper, a lad of eight years, was fatally injured here Saturday, while playing near a derrick. A large bucket, which was being hoisted, fell and struck him on the head.

Bole Holds Seat.

Winnipeg, Man., April 29.—The election petition against D. W. Bole, M.P., for Winnipeg, was dismissed by Judges Richards and Perkue on Saturday.

LOCOMOTIVE EXPLODES.

Three Trainmen Hurled to Death—Others Injured.

Ofallon, Mo., April 29.—While a freight locomotive on the Wabash road, drawing a caboose, was running at high speed near here Saturday, the boiler of the engine exploded, killing three trainmen, injuring two others seriously and wrecking the locomotive and caboose. Sections of the locomotive demolished the caboose and killed a brakeman. The engineer and firemen were hurled, with parts of the engine and tender, 150 feet from the track. The cause of the explosion is not known.

Rupture In Russ Cabinet.

St. Petersburg, April 29.—The lack of harmony between Premier Stolypin and the reactionary wing of the Cabinet culminated last week in an almost open rupture and a reorganization of the members appears imminent.

Comptroller of the Empire Schwane-Each, a reactionary Cabinet member, who has been engaged heart and soul in the campaign for the immediate dissolution of the Duma, has already received an intimation that his resignation was desired. He has, however, appealed to the Emperor, declaring he would resign only on the express command of His Majesty. He still retains his portfolio, although he is no longer admitted to the confidence of the Premier.

The reorganization of the Cabinet, if carried out, would bring no change in policy. The discordant elements would be eliminated and nothing more.

Scant Courtesy to Peasants.

St. Petersburg, April 29.—The deputation of Conservative peasant members of the Lower House of Parliament was received by the Emperor yesterday at Tsarskeo-Selo, and returned in a disappointed mood at the scant ceremony with which they were received.

They were bunched in a big delegation of military men and Constitutional Democrats, and were greeted with the usual perfunctionary expressions of His Majesty's pleasure at meeting his subjects.

The Emperor did not give the spokesman of the peasant delegation an opportunity to deliver the loyal speech which he had prepared.

Angry Mob Fight Workers.

Cleveland, O., April 29.—The first blood was shed Saturday in the trouble between the American Shipbuilding Co. and its striking employes. Three hundred angry men and women waited at the gates for the non-union men to leave. A fight ensued when the workers came out, in which several men were injured, one perhaps fatally. A patrol wagon loaded with police arrived in time to avert a dangerous riot. John Marion, a strikebreaker, the man most seriously injured, was taken to his home. He says he was attacked by several men. He may die.

Must Serve Life Sentence.

Binghamton, N. Y., April 29.—Frank Miner, who was convicted Wednesday of murder in the second degree for the killing of James A. Tobey, on the night of Oct. 24, 1906, was sentenced on Saturday to Auburn prison for life.

FOR CHEAP AND ARTISTIC WORK.

Daily Intelligencer.

The C. N. Railway.

It will be seen, by reference to the article in another column, that, on the 15th of next month, the question will be settled: Shall the C.N.R. be welcome to enter this city, or shall it be opposed and, perhaps, be forced to come no closer to this city than Foxboro.

This question is a most important one for Belleville, and would, we believe, be answered in only one way by fully nine-tenths of our people were their opinions asked. Belleville needs the C. N. R., and needs it badly. For years our people have bewailed the lack of cheap freight rates and transportation facilities, which, it has been many times pointed out, stood in the way of Belleville's progress as an industrial centre. Now, when the opportunity comes to secure what has so long been wished for, objections are raised and there is a possibility of the scheme being burked.

It is the duty of the City Council and Board of Trade, we believe, to appoint a committee strongly in favor of the plan to have the C.N.R. enter this city, whose duty it shall be to attend the conference at Ottawa. With our large debenture debt and high tax rate this city can afford to let no sentimental reasons stand in the way of her progress in an industrial way. Let us have C.N.R. connection, and as speedily as possible.

"An Englishman" writes: "I was much interested in the remarks, as reported in your columns, by Messrs. Walter Alford and C. M. Stork, re the desirability of re-organizing the old St. George's Society. I have talked with many fellow-Englishmen on the subject, and one and all express a desire to see a move made in the matter. That a branch of the society could begin operations with quite a large membership is sure. All that is needed is for some one to start the ball rolling. I would respectfully suggest that Messrs. Alford and Stork, who advanced the idea of resurrecting the society, should call a meeting of those interested and willing to join. The outcome, I am sure, would be gratifying to all concerned."

The coal miners now on strike in British Columbia and Alberta, according to statements in the local papers, make from $3 to $12 a day, and average from $5 to $6, which when they choose to work gives them about $1,500 a year. Others than miners employed about the collieries, at ordinary laborers' work, get from $2 to $3.50 a day. If these men do not get the increase they seek, says the Montreal Gazette they will hardly be objects of pity.

Ex-Mayor Hugo, of Duluth, is in Kingston just now. He has had much experience in road-building, and the Whig interviewed him in regard to Kingston's roads, which are about to be repaired. The Duluth gentleman said he would unhesitatingly recommend tar macadam as best fitted for Kingston's needs. It is cheaper than any other pavement, besides being economical and lasting. Inasmuch as conditions in Kingston are about the same as here, it may fairly be assumed that advice which fits one place will fit the other.

One of the chief things about road building is to get a good crown on the road, Mr. Hugo said. As Mayor he was determined to use every effort in this direction. The Engineer didn't want to put on such a high crown as he proposed, but he insisted, and the result was a great success. A well-crowned road means that good drainage will be assured, the water being kept away from the centre. Tar macadam was found to be proof against the attacks of rain and flood. It was also found to make a road on which horses could be easily handled. It was difficult to draw a heavy load up an incline on an asphalt paved street but quite easy up a tar macadam paved hill. The Duluth roads that were built five years ago are to-day as good as ever. They haven't cost one cent in repairs and give promise of lasting for many years to come.

• • •

Mr. Hugo would not recommend limestone macadam for a top dressing. It might be all right for the foundation, he said, but for surface granite was needed. Limestone macadam would only wear away. He would strongly advise tar macadam, for this was best suited to the streets here. It would stand the heaviest traffic in any ordinary city. The cheapest way would be for the city to buy a plant for making the macadam. If this work was let year by year to contractors, without the city having a plant of its own, the cost of construction would be much greater. Regarding the gutters, or water tables, Mr. Hugo said that those on Duluth's streets were of tar macadam, the same as the rest of the road, and were built right up to the concrete walks. Concrete gutters would not be satisfactory, he said, as the water would sooner or later be sure to heave the concrete and gradually wear ruts in the sides of the road. When well laid, and crowned high, a tar macadam road Mr. Hugo said, would last a great many years without requiring a cent of expenditure in repairs. Time would come when it might be necessary to open up a street to repair a sewer, but repairs could easily be made, and the road would be as good as before.

• • •

According to a writer in the New York Medical Journal, inflammation of the eye, nasal catarrh, middle ear disease, tonsilitis, quinzy, laryngitis, bronchitis, pneumonia and influenza may all be derived from the dirt of the streets. All of which reminds us that we annually pay the price of clean streets in doctors' bills, loss of wages and suffering. A great many people in this city are just now suffering with nasal catarrh, bronchitis, influenza, etc. The cold, raw wind is blamed for it, but in reality it may be the dirt of the streets, which the wind blows about, that is responsible.

SHE RULES BY LOVE.

Peterboro Review: It has been stated by one who recently turned up the discipline books of the Public schools, that in one of the rooms the teacher has not administered corporal punishment for three years. Needless to say this teacher is a young lady with a very sweet, gentle disposition and a fascinating manner. Nevertheless she has a strong personality and the boys and girls are kept under control by means foreign to the teachers of years ago. With all these good qualities on the part of the teacher the pupils also deserve credit. They are evidently of an entirely different temperament to their daddies, who made their school days the most sensational period of their lives.

THE RETIRED FARMER BURSTS INTO SONG.

I love to think of boyhood days when
I arose at four,
And fetched of water from the well
8,000 pails or more.
And then I'd wake the harrow up and pacify the plow,
I love to lie in bed and think I needn't
do it now.

I love to think of boyhood days when
I the porkers fed.
I used to fix their breakfast food
ere yet the sky was red.
I used to dry shampoo the horse and manicure the cow,
I love to lie in bed and think I needn't
do it now.

GETTING OUR MONEY'S WORTH.

Mail and Empire: The country is getting the worth of the money the increased sessional indemnities are costing it. It may turn up its nose at the legislation produced, but it cannot deny that the extended sessions have the salutary effect of prolonging the exposure of graft, maladministration and extravagance. Had the session been shortened by six weeks, some of the most scandalous misdeeds to which the Government has been a party could not have had the airing they got. There cannot be too much ventilation where there is so much unwholesomeness. The longer Parliament is in session the longer is the lid off, and the better can the people see for themselves the state of affairs they have to put an end to.

RING WORM AND DANDRUFF.

They are Each Caused by a Pestiferous Germ.

Ring Worm and dandruff are somewhat similar in their origin; each is caused by a parasite. The germ that causes dandruff digs to the root of the hair, and saps its vitality, causing failing hair, and, finally, baldness. Without dandruff there would never be baldness, and to cure dandruff it is necessary to kill the germ. There has been no hair preparation that would do this until the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide, which positively kills the dandruff germ, allays itching instantly and makes hair glossy and soft as silk. Take no substitutes. There is nothing "just as good."

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice, whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

An Immigration Commission.

On Monday, in Washington, an immigration commission held its first session, and, presently, the members composing it, public men and university professors, will visit the principal foreign countries from which the new arrivals in the United States come. The itinerary will include Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, Austria-Hungary, Spain and Italy, and perhaps will be extended to Sweden, Denmark, Turkey and Greece, and the possible immigrant will be studied as a producing and consuming factor by trained economists. To-day, it is said, many Americans formerly opposed to immigration have radically changed their opinion. The south and west are now loudly calling for labor, and the chief problem is how to distribute the new arrivals. About a million immigrants are now entering the United States yearly, and it is estimated that of every two one is needed to take the place of an artisan or laborer who has fallen by the way. It is startling, but is vouched for by authority, that, in contrast, with the influx of about a million immigrants, there is an exodus from United States employment of five hundred thousand wage earners annually, who are killed or injured in accidents. Such is one of the toils exacted by "progress." The calculation has been made that every immigrant adds an average of a hundred dollars on arrival to the wealth of the United States, and that the general economic gain resulting from the labor of the adult citizen is four hundred dollars yearly. It follows that the immigrants who have entered the United States within the past three years and who are now engaged in the industries of the land, are contributing by their labor some $1,200,000,000 a year to the prosperity of the country. This profitableness does not, we presume, cease at any color line, though the value of different types may vary, and it is probable that in excluding the orientals the country is sacrificing wealth that would measure itself in enormous figures. Such a source of wealth is well worthy of a commission to study it, and the result of the commission's investigations should be most valuable to ourselves.

OBITUARY.

MRS. JUDGE DEAN.

Mrs. Judge Dean, who died suddenly at Toronto on Saturday morning, was a lady who was well-known in this city. She was the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Gilbert C. Bogart, and was born here. Her early life was spent in the city, and by her geniality and sociable qualities the deceased lady made many warm friends. For over 30 years Mrs. Dean, with the late Judge, resided in the Town of Lindsay. After his death Mrs. Dean went to Toronto to reside with relatives. For many years the deceased was an active member of the Methodist church, being a diligent worker. Mrs. Dean was a most estimable, Christian lady, beloved by all who knew her. She is survived by two sons, Harry and William H., who reside in the United States, and two daughters, Mrs. A. O. Tait, of Toronto, and Miss Daisy, of New York. Ex-Mayor Bogart, of this city, is a brother, and Mrs. Charles Westfall, of Herchimer Avenue, is a sister of the deceased. To all the bereaved ones will be extended the sincere sympathy of many friends.

THE INTERMENT.

The remains arrived here at noon to-day and were interred this afternoon. Services were held at the residence of ex-Mayor Bogart, and were conducted by the Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Bridge St. Church. A number of beautiful floral tributes were placed upon the casket by relatives and friends. The bearers were Messrs. S. S. Lazier, G. Denmark, Wm. Johnson, J. J. B. Flint, J. Taylor and Sheriff Hope.

Sea Salvage.

One of the most interesting cases of sea salvage ever recorded is that of the Suevic, which was wrecked in a fog near The Lizard a few weeks ago. It was found impossible to get the entire ship off the rocks, and so dynamite was used to break her in two. That done, two powerful tugs were employed and, at high tide, they, with the help of the Suevic's own engines, succeeded in floating three-quarters of the hull and towing it safely to Southampton. At Southampton a new fore part is to be fitted on to the vessel, and soon she will be in active service again.

DELICATE CHILDREN.

ADVICE TO BELLEVILLE MOTHERS WHO HAVE DELICATE CHILDREN.

If we could only make all fathers and mothers in Belleville regard what we say there would be fewer sickly, delicate children on our streets.

Rapidly growing children need a great deal of vitality. They grow fast, play hard, and work too hard at school, and many such children are tired, thin, pale and worn when they ought to be robust and rosy.

Every run-down, growing child in Belleville should take Vinol, our delicious cod liver preparation without oil. It requires almost no digestion at all and cannot upset delicate, weakened stomachs as do old-fashioned cod liver oil and emulsions. Vinol also contains peptonate of iron.

It strengthens the digestive organs, makes new vitality, sound flesh and muscle tissue, strong bone structure and pure, rich, red blood. Vinol fills out hollow cheeks and makes thin little arms and legs plump and round.

Said Mr. J. S. McKeown, our local druggist: "We cannot recommend Vinol too highly for puny, weak and ailing children, to build up the rundown, overworked, tired and debilitated, or to give renewed vitality to the aged, and we cheerfully refund the money in every case where it fails." J. S. McKeown, druggist.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

FOOTBALL.

'Mutes are the "Whole Tip."

On Saturday afternoon the first of a series of football matches between teams composing a City League took place. The Deaf and Dumb Institute and Marsh & Henthorn's teams tried conclusions, with the result that the mutes scored six goals to their opponents' nil. The game took place at the Institution grounds.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Argyll Football Club, 15th Regiment will hold a meeting at the officers' quarters, Church St., next to Opera House, to-night at 8 o'clock, for members and intending players.

It looks as though Montreal and Toronto both have good teams this year. Which is a relief from the sorry exhibitions they have been putting up in recent years.

Before a crowd of 5,000 people the Capital lacrosse team, now touring England, won the match on Lords cricket ground on Saturday. The Duke of Argyle's team were their opponents, and the patron of the team was an excited spectator. The Prince and Princess were in attendance, and Canada was represented by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The Earl of Aberdeen was another guest. The score was comparatively close, being 10 to 8 at the finish, but the Capitals had little difficulty in holding the lead. Weather conditions alone prevented the event from being a brilliant function. There was a slight rain and the ground was in bad shape.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Forty men centered at the Y.M.C.A. yesterday to hear R. J. Colville, of Toronto, one of the foremost secretaries of the province. He possesses a very magnetic manner and as a speaker has the faculty of almost holding his audience spellbound.

The McMaster Band commence services next Sunday under Union auspices. In the evening they will hold forth in the Bridge St. church.

Mr. Hunt meets his class to-night at 7.30 and invites all who declared their desire to lead the Christian life at the recent McMaster services, to join him.

Prof. Beech, H. P. Thomas and H. J. Clarke will be the official starters at the Field day sports, May 24th. The vaulting standards have been made and are installed in the gym. for the running high jump practice.

Blames Sunshine For Much Of Sickness.

New York, May 27.—Major Charles E. Woodruff, surgeon in the army, the most eminent living student of the effects of sunlight on white men and perhaps the only historical scholar who has investigated thoroughly the part which the complexion has played in the drama of the rise and fall of nations, said to-day that sunlight is increasing tuberculosis, insanity and suicide among humanity.

"God's sunlight has credit for more false merits than any other of the many superstitions to which men have fallen victims," he declared. "We recognize the fact that it kills bacteria, but we ignorantly fail to reflect that it has just as fatal an effect on the protoplasm which composes the human system. 'God's sunlight is producing neurasthenia and cardiac feebleness and anaemia, is promoting tuberculosis, and increasing insanity and suicide every day, and not only in the tropics, but here in New York.

"God's cloudiness' wherever it is found, the shade of dark houses and trees and awnings, is promoting health, sanity and long life."

Major Woodruff's thesis is in brief that man, originally a dark-skinned and hairy animal of the forest, a denizen or cave dweller of nocturnal habits, afraid of the sun, and injured by it, survives as a creature into which he has now evolved only by virtue of the pigmentation of the skin in proportion to the degree of light to which he is exposed.

A Fortunate Escape.

Trenton Advocate: The four-year-old son of Mr. Joshua Dafoe had a miraculous escape from death on Saturday last. While hanging on to the box of a heavy lumber wagon he missed his hold and fell under the wheels, which passed over his body. Dr. Stevenson, who was called in, found him badly crushed, although, strange to say, no bones were broken. At present the little fellow is doing nicely.

Found what? Why that Chamberlain's Salve cures eczema and all manner of itching of the skin. I have been afflicted for many years with skin disease. I had to get up three or four times every night and wash with cold water to allay the terrible itching, but since using this salve in December, 1905, the itching has stopped and has not troubled me — ELDER JOHN T. KING'S NEW YACHT.

Description of His Majesty's Turbine Boat.

A further demonstration—if any be needed—of King Edward's love of the sea is furnished by the new turbine yacht, appropriately named Alexandra, which is being built for His Majesty, and which will be launched from the yard of Messrs. A. and J. Inglis & Co. at Glasgow on April 30.

The new royal yacht is a most elegantly appointed vessel, her fittings and handsome decorations making her, in this respect, quite the first craft afloat. The Alexandra is intended to replace the Osborne, which is no longer considered to be fit for use. She is a vessel of 285 feet long by 40 feet broad and is 2,000 tons gross.

Three Parsons turbines will be the propelling power, each of these turbines driving separate shafts. The yacht's speed capacity will be 17 knots.

Shorter by 137 feet than the Victoria and Albert, and of less than half the tonnage of the former, the new vessel is intended only for the private use of the Royal Family and their immediate attendants. She is meant primarily for short cruises and for visiting harbors where the draught of water is limited, such as Flushing, Nice, and other Continental ports which his Majesty when on holiday frequents.

The order for the construction of the new yacht was received by the Glasgow shipbuilding firm in competition with a number of other firms who submitted designs, and it was given to them by an Admiralty Committee, including Mr. Philip Watts, Director of Naval Construction, who approved the designs.

The Queen's drawing-room and the smoke-room are on the upper deck aft. The decorated work, furniture, etc., will, as far as possible, be made in Scotland.

Insult to King William.

More than two hundred years ago Antonio Verrio, a painter, took revenge on William III. of England by painting a clever caricature of him riding on a black donkey. The caricature was not discovered by the King, for it was concealed in the famous painting of "The King's Staircase," in Hampton Court, in London.

The insult was discovered recently by Charles Allom, artist-decorator for the King of England and the Prince of Wales.

Full extent of the insult has not been made clear, for there has also been found a sinister triple-faced Diana, probably modelled after the features of some court lady, possibly Mary, William's Queen, to whom a Cupid, wearing the features of the King, mounted on a black donkey, is paying adoration.

He is upon a black donkey and gazes upward at Diana in an attitude of supplication and adoration. At a distance the Cupid appears of the usual type, but when Mr. Allom had examined it closely from a scaffold he found the face was a perfect caricature of William of Orange, whose bald head with his wig removed, showing a fringe of sparse gray hair at the nape of the neck, is to be seen quite clearly at short range.

This clearly intended insult is accentuated when the head of Diana is seen. She is seated on a crescent and appears as a beautiful woman. But looked at intently it is discovered that she wears three faces, one in front and the others on either side of her head, with the ears forming the noses. These features have sinister expressions.

Ladies Wanted to Bet.

The clause in the New Victorian (Australia) Gaming Suppression Act, which prohibits the making of wagers on a racecourse between bookmakers and women, was responsible for some comical incidents at Flemington Racecourse recently, when the law had to be observed for the first time on a registered course. Many women, who are in the habit of frequenting the betting-ring, and know more as a rule about the proper price of a horse than of the doings of the Government, attempted to make wagers as usual, and were indignant when the bookmakers declined to do business. One feminine backer, who had evidently made up her mind that she had a certainty in her possession, insisted upon being laid odds, and threw the money into the bookmaker's bag, at the same time demanding a ticket; while another, who had been told that the law did not permit betting with women on racecourses, sent her son to put the money on, but was again disappointed, as the son was obviously under the age of twenty-one, and, according to the law, could not make a bet.

THE SPEAKER'S DIGNITY.

Ancient Ceremonies That Survive In the House of Commons.

"Hats off, strangers, for the Speaker," the constables standing in the lobby entrance of the English House of Commons cry as they come to attention.

"Hats off! Way for the Speaker!" is the command given by the police inspector in the so-called lobby, which is really the antechamber of the House.

At once, as when the muezzin calls the faithful to prayer, there is silence and respect, and heads are bared. The Speaker is about to leave his palace adjoining the House to take his seat. "Mr. Speaker," according to A. Maurice Low in Appleton's Magazine, is a very great dignitary.

The First Commoner.

By law he is "the first commoner" and is given official precedence over every other commoner in the kingdom. During his term of office he receives a salary of $25,000 a year, the only member of Parliament not a member of the Government who is in receipt of a salary. He is provided with an official residence which is maintained at public expense. To keep him in the straight and narrow way spiritually he has his private chaplain. To enable him to walk in the devious ways of the law he has his private counsel. To minister to his comfort and convenience and dignity he has a private secretary, a train-bearer and a messenger. And when he retires he is raised to the peerage with a pension of $20,000 a year for life.

In Stately Procession.

Mr. Speaker has now left his residence and in stately and picturesque procession is entering the corridor that leads to the House. He is preceded by an usher. Then comes the sergeant-at-arms in a black coat open at the breast to show the daintiest of white cambric ruffles, knee breeches, black buckles, with a rapier on his hip. The sergeant-at-arms, who is appointed by the King personally, although he is an officer of the House of Commons, is paid a salary of $6,000 a year and has an official residence. He carries the great glittering mace on his shoulder and is followed by two doorkeepers, who wear knee breeches, silk stockings, and coats and waistcoats of the conventional evening cut, their wide expanse of shirt front partly covered by a gold chain suspended around the neck and meeting in a large gold badge.

Huge Wig and Gown.

Then comes the Speaker in huge wig and silk gown, which is held up by his train-bearer, followed by the gowned figure of the chaplain, with two doorkeepers to close the procession. The staff of doorkeepers range themselves round the walls of the antechamber—a room with wonderful oak carving and stained glass windows—and make respectful and deep obeisance as the Speaker passes, while the members stand with bared heads and in silence until the procession has entered the House. Then the members crowd in, the doors are locked, and again the voice of the muezzin is heard crying to the faithful, "Speaker at prayers."

Passing of the Lance.

The order issued recently by Mr. Haldane, British War Minister, directing that for the future Dragoons and Dragoon Guards are not to carry lances, even on ceremonial parades, seems to signify the end of this weapon.

Yet, on its invention, it proved itself a terribly effective one, as Britain found to her cost on the day she first became acquainted with it. This took place at the battle of Albuera.

Napoleon, with his keen eye for the exigencies of military service, had armed with it, as an experiment, four of his cavalry regiments, and these, in a heavy storm of rain, succeeded in surrounding and enveloping an unfortunate British infantry battalion, the old 3rd Foot, better known perhaps as "The Buffs."

What followed was little better than a massacre. The bayonets of our men were almost as useless as so many darning needles when opposed to the new weapon under the circumstances in which the "Buffs" found themselves and in less than fifteen minutes the unlucky regiment had ceased to exist, its total loss amounting to 664 officers and men.

Woman In the House.

A lady appeared in the House of Commons the other night, and members feared for a moment that the dreams of the suffragettes had come true. The tall, broad and stalwart Sir John Kennaway pushed his way through the swinging doors and made toward the bar. There was a gasp of surprise when in his bulky wake was sighted a demure little lady in a fawn coat. Instant visions of a suffragette plot for a woman to force entrance into the Parliamentary holy of holies under the expansive shadow of Sir John Kennaway's coat tail. "Lady, lady!" shouted two door guardians, dashing in. A big attendant, dozing in a corner, jumped forward to block the way. Mr. Gosset, the deputy sergeant-at-arms, gripped his sword and looked like business. Pell mell was the female intruder hustled into the lobby, looking very frightened, for she had been an unwitting sinner. Members smiled, settled themselves, and lapsed again to slumbrous attitudes.—London Evening Standard.

Cost of European Armies.

Europe spent in round numbers £200,000,000 on its army and £80,000,000 on its navy in 1906, as against £146,000,000 and £60,000,000 respectively in 1898. That is to say, Europe spends to-day £280,000,000 on its army and navy as against £206,000,000 in 1898, a total increase of £74,000,000, or, say 26 per cent. Seventy-four millions a year is equivalent to 4 per cent. interest upon a capital sum of £1,850,000,000.

That is the fine in which the Governments have mulcted their peoples by their refusal to act upon the standstill proposition of the Czar in 1899 and to adopt the peacemaking methods recommended by The Hague convention.—Review of Reviews.

THE CHANGEABLE MAN.

(Chicago Post.)

He said: "I'll go and seek my fate,
I'll pop the question, as to that!"
And thinking that attire had weight
He changed his hat.

Remembering that women seem
To trust completely to the eye
Before they lapse in love's young dream,
He changed his tie.

"And," he observed, "one's footwear must
Be very stylish when he woos."
The pair he wore was flecked with dust—
He changed his shoes.

"A woman's queer," he murmured
then,
"She estimates my hat and boot
And tie"—and so he stopped again
And changed his suit.

He started out and tried to plan
The way to pop the question best;
Came back, and, after thoughtful scan,
He changed his vest.

Alas! the lovelorn maiden waits
And tries to call herself resigned;
The man no longer hesitates—
He changed his mind!

PENSIONS IN AUSTRALIA.

Provision For Old Age Devised by Royal Commission.

A report of great interest has been made by the Australian royal commission on Old-Age Pensions. The commission was appointed in 1905 to consider the existing state schemes and to devise a scheme for the whole Commonwealth. The systems at present in force are:

New South Wales: Maximum pension 10s a week; for married people 7s 6d a week each; may be claimed at the age of 65. Income, including pension, must not exceed £52 a year. Cost to state of 22,000 pensioners, £508,000.

New Zealand: Maximum 10s a week; in case of a married couple, joint income, including pension, must not exceed £90. May be claimed at 65, if claimant has been 25 years resident. Police magistrates administer, without boards, at trifling cost. Pensioners, 11,770; total cost, £325,000.

Victoria: Maximum 8s a week; at 65, or earlier in case of dangerous or unhealthy occupations; 20 years' residence. Income, including pension, must not exceed £20. Pensioners, 11,452; cost, £205,000.

The commissioners recommend a scheme of old-age pensions for the whole Commonwealth to be paid out of the consolidated revenue, as follows:

Maximum 10s a week, payable at 65, or, on conditions, at 60 in case of permanent indaparity. Payments fortnightly through postoffice. Total income, including pension, not to exceed £52. Estimated cost £2,500,000 a year.

The commissioners lay down that pensions should be granted as a right, not as a charity, though they propose that persons of drunken or disreputable habits shall be ineligible, and that in certain cases the allowances shall be suspended. They also suggest that a penalty shall be imposed for supplying a pensioner with intoxicating drink. They do not think the institution of pensions will discourage thrift, and suggest that the Government should encourage a spirit of independence by establishing an assurance system which would enable those wishing to provide for old age to do so with the certainty afforded by a Government guarantee.

TWO MEN SNOWED UP.

Hut Buried In Drift and They Have to Tunnel Out.

An Englishman named Morgan and a German friend of his have had a terrible experience on the Salzfluh, a mountain 9,265 feet high.

They left Schruns, on the frontier of Switzerland and Austria, with the intention of ascending the mountain on skis, and they took no guides with them.

Nothing was heard of them, and at the end of three days a search party was organized. It found no trace of the missing men, and Mr. Morgan and his friend were given up for lost.

They crawled into Schruns half dead from want of food and exhaustion.

When near the summit of the Sulzfluh they were overtaken by a blinding snowstorm, and after wandering about aimlessly for some time they discovered a hut, in which they took shelter.

Hour after hour the snow fell, until the hut was buried beneath it and they were close prisoners. Their only food for four days was two loaves of bread, and melted snow was their only drink.

Then Mr. Morgan, in desperation, burrowed through the drift round the hut, and forced a passage through the snow, which was waist-high in the open, followed by his German companion, who was even more exhausted than he was.

Both of them are reported to be well on the road to recovery.

The Queer Parson Bird.

Two splendid male specimens of the peo honey eater were recently acquired by the Zoological Society. Its throat is adorned with small white feathers, which, from their resemblance to clerical bands, have gained for it the name "parson bird." Its metallic green plumage, with bronze and purplish reflections, is very beautiful. Its long and rather slender beak is curved; it has rather large feet and the length of its tail is considerable.

Although somewhat rarely seen in this country alive, this bird is plentiful on both the north and south islands of New Zealand. It is a good songster and mimic, and its lively temperament renders it a most interesting cage bird. Its food consists of berries, insects, and honey. It has an extensile tongue, the tip of which is forked, and, being covered with fibres, forms a kind of brush, most useful to the parson bird in gathering its food.—Pall Mall Gazette

PLANKED FISH.

The Up to Date Way to Cook Shad on a Wood Plank.

Planked fish are now in such favor that every spring aspiring housekeeper should own a plank. This should be of hard wood about two inches thick and either grooved or slightly hollowed in the center to retain the juices and furnished with clips or wires to fasten the fish to it. The plank must be heated before using. While the ideal way to plank is before an open fire, the upper grate of a very hot oven is a good substitute. Planking is usually associated with shad, but any good white fleshed fish, as bluefish, whitefish or halibut, is equally good.

Frying is acknowledged the least digestible way to cook fish. It can, however, be done deliciously if the fish is either rolled in flour or dipped in well seasoned egg and breadcrumbs and done in very hot fat. The temperature should be slightly lower than when cooking such things as croquettes, whose interior has been previously prepared. Oil or cottolene is the best medium for frying, as lard is apt to taste.

Besides these staple ways of preparing fish, delicious rechauffes, croquettes and salads may be made from leftovers. Escaloped fish in little individual forms or shells is good either for a family lunch or as a course at more formal affairs. It should always be served with sauce tartare or at least with a rather acid mayonnaise.

Every one should own some of the interesting fish molds which now are very inexpensive. These give most attractive forms in which to prepare left overs or, indeed, new creamed fishes. The sauces in which the fish is prepared should always be a little stiffer than when it is not to be molded. A very attractive way to serve salmon, either fresh or canned, is in timbale molds. It is also very artistic as a course for a dinner when chopped, creamed and molded in the shape of a huge curled fish and served on a flat platter, covered with caper sauce and garnished with parsley and lemon.

TO MAKE HER TALLER.

The Clothes a Little Woman Ought to Wear.

Just back from Paris, the tiny mite of a woman was airing her views on clothes.

"The American dressmaker takes too little account of height, but lays all the stress on weight," she said. "Her clients are apt to be divided into two classes—stout and slender. The slender little woman of five feet gets about the same treatment at her hands as the slender young amazon of five feet seven or eight.

"A malines bow at the back of the neck is a wonderful improver to little persons. It adds height marvelously.

"Then there is the shoulder. Feel of my shoulder seam. It corresponds exactly with my shoulder line, but let it be a fraction of an inch too long and I am no longer petite, but a dwarf.

"Heavy, coarse materials are only for the tall. Fine, smooth surfaces are for us. And there is this about the skirt: Fullness should begin at the hip, not below it; otherwise the skirt becomes a mere flounce instead of a thing of lines. Between the waist line and the hips the skirt should be perfectly fitted.

"The hat for a small person is more becoming if it matches the uppermost part of the costume. If the bodice is a tint, the hat should be of the same complexion. In the case of a very small woman, waist and skirt of different tones or colors are not to be thought of. Even the gloves do their part in making or marring the picture. White ones with dark gowns dwarf the height, and so, too, do capes and other fussy shoulder arrangements. Trimmed skirts and braided effects are also ruled out."

KITCHEN HINTS.

Try basting fish with French dressing made as if for a salad with olive oil and vinegar, salt and red pepper.

If whiting is used for polishing glass, put it in muslin bags. Dampen the glass lightly, then rub with the bag and polish with crumpled paper.

Shellac poured over the worn places in granite ware and the vessel held over the fire so that the shellac can cook hard will make them last a long time.

Wash the coffeepot with a solution of a tablespoonful of salsoda and boiling water. It will not be necessary to boil the pot if this solution is used for washing it.

A quick drying glue can be made by putting the glue into a bottle two-thirds full and filling up with common whisky. Cork tight and set by for three days, and it will dissolve without the application of heat and will keep for years.

To Restore Velvet.

Velvet so easily plushes that it is an extravagant article to use.

Grease spots or a stain caused by wear may be removed with turpentine rubbed on briskly with a bit of flannel. Two or three applications may be necessary.

The pile of velvet or velveteen may be raised by stretching it tightly over the top of a basin holding boiling water and stroking it gently in the opposite direction with a soft brush.

Most velveteens will wash, not once, but many times, if they are handled properly. Put them through two lathers of warm soapy water, using a moderately stiff brush along the pile as the material lies stretched on the washing board. Rinse in cold clear water to which has been added salt and hang dripping wet in a shady place to dry. Do not squeeze or rub, but if dirty use the brush liberally.

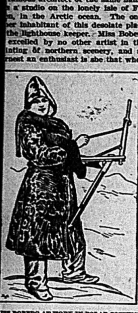
WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS ANNA BOBERG.

oman Artist Who Lives Alone in the Arctic Regions.

Miss Anna Boberg, the celebrated redish artist and sister of the equalfamous architect of the same name, s a studio on the lonely isle of Fun, in the Arctic ocean. The only er inhabitant of this desolate place the lighthouse keeper. Miss Boberg excelled by no other artist in the inting of northern scenery, and so rnest an enthusiast is she that when er fingers become too cold to hold a rush it is strapped on her hand. Her ictures created a furore in Paris, here they were exhibited last winter. lad in reindeer skins, she takes trips ill farther than her home into the rctics, climbing slippery heights and ransferring what she sees to canvas. n these trips her food is codfish, sea ulls' eggs and coffee and her sleeping place the abandoned hut of some ative fisherman who has been driven outh by the cold.



ISS BOBERG AT WORK IN POLAR COSTUME.

A Popcorn Party For Children.

A correspondent in Mother's Magaine tells of a popcorn party recently iven for children and described it so elightfully that it seems almost a rime that every little boy and girl annot enjoy the pleasure of such a ood time.

"A kitchen party," it said in the otes of invitation, and "bring an pron with you."

The kitchen was large and roomy nd was decorated, in keeping with the estive occasion, with colored tissue paper ornaments and festoons of popcorn. Strings of colored popcorn festooned the chandelier over the dining oom table, and the candlelights had pink crepe paper shades ornamented with strings of popcorn, all of the same length, that hung down from the top of the shade all around two inches below, as a fringe of beads or crystals would do.

Pretty little souvenirs and decorations on the table were made of popcorn that the hostess had prepared as small baskets, with ribbon wound wire handles, decorated with a ribbon bow or autumn leaf. A little ship stood as a centerpiece on a glass mirror, with a shore of popcorn. The boat shape, made of stiff paper, was entirely covered with white popcorn. It had white sails, and the mainmast was also coated with kernels of the popped corn. The boat was filled with a cargo of nuts and the little baskets with bonbons.

Jolly souvenirs for each place had been made of orange skins, the skins being divided halfway in four sections, when the pulp was neatly removed whole. Flaky popcorn was dropped in, then the sections pressed together with sugar sirup. A crown of popcorn adorned the top. Circles were cut out and popped corn set in for eyes, having the smoothest part turned out, with a dab of black paint for the pupil of the eyes, another for the nose, and the slit for the grinning mouth was filled in with gleaming teeth. A double frill of yellow and black tissue paper was glued in place under each.

The little guests came in time to help prepare some of the supper refreshments in the popcorn line. The boys were given the hardest part of the work—shelling the corn—while the girls, two at a time, could pop the corn on the ample space the range afforded. As fast as this was ready the hostess prepared it in an appetizing form, as molasses popcorn balls, assorted popcorn bars and popcorn potatoes. As these are a decided novelty for children, the process of their making should be explained. Beat up the white of an egg stiffly with a tablespoon of cold water and the same quantity of powdered sugar. Mix with the popcorn and molasses and roll into a ball.

Living in Flats.

Although the sanitary arrangements are always described as being "up to date," it is just as well to find out what date is referred to.

Are you surprised that all your windows are overlooked by neighbors? That's nothing! Heaps of little things have been overlooked by the landlord himself.

Take the "best bedroom." Of course no doubt it is the best of the three. "Best" is, after all, only a relative term.

We doubt, however, whether this is the expression you will make use of if you ever come to sleep in it. If you should, please remember that the neighbors can hear every word.

The "dining room" (excuse a smile) has this advantage—by standing in the middle of the room you can put all the pictures straight without moving.

The "drawing room" is no doubt so called because it has a beautiful north light which, we believe, artists find indispensable.

And just look at the tiles in the fireplace. No, you are quite right to restrain your feelings.

The "hall," you will observe, is one of those long, thin halls so fashionable in Flatland. We ourselves should have called it a passage.

It is lighted by a "borrowed light," which might just as well be returned to the person who lent it for all the good it is doing.

Ah, the "bathroom!" Very small, you say? Wait a bit. Shut the door. So. Now, you see, there is plenty of room to get into the bath, if you don't have a chair or a towel in the room.

The "kitchen" is nice. See how thoughtfully they have put the window opposite the range so that the cook shall not have the glare in her eyes when she is stirring the soup!

What's that you say? You have found a positively delightful coal cupboard which makes up for everything, as so few flats have any accommodation for coal.

One minute, please! Do you really think that it is a coal cupboard?

Look! What are those three pegs for?

Do people put pegs in coal cupboards?

Must we tell you what it is? Very well then. That, madam, we beg most humbly to inform you, that is the "servant's bedroom!"

Shams.

"My father's house is full of fakes," said a twelve-year-old playing in a neighbor's house. When asked what he meant, he recited one article after another, all cheap imitations of expensive things.

A little girl who had turned fourteen said to a friend: "Mamma says I must not pretend; that to pretend is to lie. But she pretends as much as I do. She pretends that she has a stained glass window in her bathroom when it's really only colored paper pasted on the glass. Of course mamma's a woman, and I'm not. I suppose I'll have to wait until I grow up before I can pretend."

When the remarks of these two youngsters were repeated to the parents, they were amazed that the points had fastened themselves on their children's minds. But it is here nevertheless that the pernicious habit of allowing shams and imitations in thousands of our American homes is creating its worst havoc—upon the children at the most formative periods of their lives, says the Ladies' Home Journal. And yet we expect a child to ring true in his thoughts and character when on every hand he is surrounded in his parents' home with things that are shams and imitations.

Cupid as Chauffeur.

At a bridesmaids' luncheon recently across the center of the table was a miniature road paved with rice and outlined by clusters of pink roses, the stems supporting them tied with pink ribbons. At the end of the road was a miniature (toy) automobile with Cupid as chauffeur with big rose colored goggles on. Strapped on the auto was a tiny trunk tied with white ribbon and a toy suit case with foreign labels. This clever decoration caused much fun among the bridesmaids and the bride elect. The favors were little imitation Dresden pianos, the bride elect being a pianist.

Do You Want to Be Pretty?

Don't be afraid of water. Drink plenty of it, and take as many baths as you can. Learn a few physical culture exercises, and practice them night and morning. This may all sound rather uninteresting to you, but if you follow these few suggestions you will be healthier, happier and better looking.

The Window Gardener.

Vessels of water kept standing among your plants will prove beneficial in supplying moisture. They can easily be hidden behind the foliage so that they will not appear unsightly.

Don't forget to turn your window plants around at least twice a week so that all sides will get the sunlight.

To Remove Finger Marks.

Finger marks on painted doors may be removed by rubbing with a perfectly clean cloth dipped in a little paraffin. The place should be afterward washed over with a cloth wrung out of hot water and finally polished with a dry duster.

Black kid gloves which have been worn gray at the finger tips may be made to look like new if they are rubbed with artist's black tube paint. The paint should be allowed to become perfectly dry before the gloves are worn.

Few women are careful enough about keeping control over their facial expression. They are entirely too apt to frown and look serious, thus implanting lines and wrinkles which once they come are hard to erase.

Gas burners, like other things, are apt to get dirty. Very often there is quite a little collection of rubbish on them, and if this is cleared away the improvement in the light is very noticeable.

When the liver is out of order take plenty of outdoor exercise and breathe deeply.

CANADIAN BLUE MARBLE.

Gift to Princess of Wales Leads to Its Extensive Use.

The Princess of Wales has to her credit one of the greatest sensations in building material in many years, nothing less than the reintroduction of "blue marble" for interior decoration. It is used in the outer entrance hall of Brook House, London, the great Park Lane Palace that Sir Ernest Cassel bought two years ago from Lord Tweedmouth, and that he has fitted up in marble and with a richness of detail that even the Caesars never dreamt of. The work now nearing completion makes London stare. The main staircase contains 800 tons of statuary marble from Sarravezza. Michael Angelo, sent from the Vatican in 1490 to prospect, was amazed at the beauty of this material, and it is said his report to the Pope deprecated its quality so that he might obtain a monopoly of the mine for his own sculptures. From that date all Angelo's masterpieces were chiselled from these Tuscany marbles.

In contrast with this dazzling white marble is the great outer entrance hall, pilastered with unique blue marble, knowledge of which had lapsed for many years. Credit for the rediscovery of this marble belongs entirely to the Princess of Wales, whose attention was drawn to some fragments of the blue stone presented to her at the time of her voyage with the prince to Canada.

When Marlborough House was undergoing overhauling and improvements the princess showed her specimens to Mr. Allom, expressing great enthusiasm as to their beauty of color, and her desire to have the quarry found and the beautiful blue sodalite made use of. Mr. Allom set out to prospect for the blue marble, and with the able help of the Geological Survey Department of Canada discovered the mine in Hastings county, in the centre of Ontario.

With a few friends Mr. Allom promptly bought the mine outright, and the blue stone now beautifies many of the Princess of Wales' rooms. The peculiar hardness of the mineral renders the work of cutting most difficult, and much time and ingenuity, both here and on the continent, have been expended, but at last the difficult process of cutting and moulding appears to be solved.

At Brook House the same blue Canadian marble mixed with pavonazzo will adorn the sumptuous outer entrance hall when it is completed. Hundreds of men are now working to get the necessary quantity of 60 tons cut and moulded to form the cornices and pilasters of the apartment.

QUEBEC NOT BEHIND.

Ancient City Will Not Lag In Industry and Commerce.

There is much talk about the boom in Winnipeg, Port Arthur and Fort William, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary, and other new cities. Every little town in the West is talking about its wonderful development. They rather pity the poor, old, effete East. Yet it is doubtful if there is a city in the Dominion making more progress than the Ancient Capital. Quebec is the oldest city in Canada—three hundred years of age in 1908. For a long period it was so overshadowed by Montreal that it seemed to be shrinking back into insignificance.

To-day all this is changed. The Quebec bridge is approaching completion and Intercolonial trains will soon be running across the River. The impossible is almost accomplished. The Grand Trunk Pacific is building north and south. The Canadian Northern Quebec Railway is building a direct short line to Montreal, the portion from Quebec to Garveau Junction being the only uncompleted link. Another line is being built along the South Shore to serve much the same purpose, through the southern counties. The Canadian Pacific steamers have made Quebec their summer port. So much for the railways and steamboat lines.

Electrical development is proceeding fast. Five thousand horse power is being developed at Montmorency Falls and a contract has been made for the immediate development of six thousand horse power at another Falls, but twenty miles away. Ultimately both these stations will be enlarged. To this is added the pulp and paper development of the Province. The city is crowded with new business men, many of them from the United States. Mines, quarries and pulp limits are talked of in hotel corridors and on the street corners.

Quebec's day has come and no one will be jealous. The West has had its share. Ontario needs no coddling. The progress in historic Lower Canada has been inevitably slower, but its great resources were bound to be discovered in time. There is every indication that from now on, that Province will not lag behind in the industrial and commercial race, and the City of Quebec will lead in the renaissance.

Are Salmon Late?

The output of the Harrison and Bon Accord salmon hatcheries will be at least a month late in maturing this year, on account of the unusually severe winter which has been experienced in this part of British Columbia.

The ova have been over a month in hatching. The young fish, however, were not injured at all by the cold weather. It is thought that they will mature just as well although late, and that they will be fully as hardy as in other years.

The output of the Harrison hatchery will be about sixteen million salmon this year, while the Bon Accord hatchery is taking care of eight or nine million young sockeyes. This will make a total output of about twenty-five million fish, while the usual output of the two hatcheries is about thirty million. The cause of the smaller number this year was the heavy freshets which occurred last fall during the spawning season. Many of the pens which contained salmon from which spawn were to be taken were washed out and lost, and new ones had to be installed on the creeks, and fewer salmon were taken.

A CHURCH SUPPER.

Girls Dressed In Quaint Japanese Costumes as Waitresses.

Every zealous church worker is keen about knowing new ways of luring the elusive dollar out of the pockets of her fellow church members. The wiles that a sweet and simple woman will permit herself to use in the chase after this same dollar or even after a small quarter of that amount are amusing to her masculine victims, and I am sure that they often feign a reluctance to "give up" that is only a make believe just to see her efforts.

A Japanese supper makes an attractive change from the ordinary. The little supper tables are arranged with the graceful artificial cherry and plum blossoms that all the Japanese shops have, and wistarias and chrysanthemums are arranged about the hall.

A lot of girls dressed a la Japanese act as waitresses. Every girl loves this, for it gives her a chance to "make up" her lips and cheeks and stick long daggers and tiny fans in her pompadoured hair. Of course dark girls are rather more in keeping, but it doesn't really matter. Weak tea, various kinds of rice dishes, candied orange peel, little thin cakes and nuts were the Japanese additions to a regular supper, oyster shortcakes, cabbage salad (shredded to imitate chrysanthemum petals), pickles, sandwiches, doughnuts, cakes and coffee.

The favors were little Japanese lanterns filled with tiny candles. Those receiving them were asked to save them, using them as banks and filling them with small coins for the next missionary tea, held quarterly.

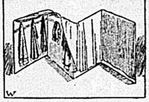
A popcorn supper followed by a little cantata is a novelty for a missionary tea. Serve sandwiches, popcorn balls, crackerjack, plain and buttered popcorn and cakes made by putting the popped corn in small molds and pouring the hot candy sirup on them. Serve coffee, lemonade and milk to drink.

Have the assistants in red cotton dresses, with coquettish caps and aprons, trimmed with strings of popped corn. One church makes considerable money during the winter by serving coffee cake and coffee suppers each week at a home of a member. The charge is 10 cents, and this gives one a cup of good coffee and all the coffee cake he wishes

DRESSMAKING HINT.

A Screen Used as Hanger When Making Clothes.

Unfinished skirts should be hung up, not folded. In fact, much unfinished work is best for this treatment, but the hanging must be properly done or the result will be worse than that of folding. If one has not sufficient closet room to give the desired space for the regular season's sewing, the following will be found very convenient: On the back of a screen tack, at the top only, a strip of ticking about four inches deep; over this tack, again at the top only, a piece of muslin long enough to form a drop curtain nearly to the floor and slightly full.



UTILIZING SCREEN FOR DRESSMAKING.

To the under strip any amount of work may be fastened with safety pins. The curtain falling over will protect from dust. The screen can be pretty well folded and set across a corner without injuring the work in the least.

When attaching waists to this device, fold together so that the shoulders are even, and put two safety pins at the neck, one at the shoulder and one directly in front. This prevents any sagging and the formation of any unseemly wrinkles.

Another advantage that hanging has over folding is that one can see at a glance just what is waiting to be done without turning over and possibly mussing anything not needed at the moment.

A Persian Rug Test.

Real Persian rugs have one remarkable property that must be peculiarly their own. One day a woman went out to buy a very fine rug, and after looking at many kinds she finally elected to purchase a beautiful cream colored one, which the salesman declared was a genuine Persian rug.

"This," the man continued, "is the best proof of its genuineness," and he took from the open grate a redhot coal, holding it tight in the tongs. Then, to the utter astonishment of his customer, he touched the coal to the splendid rug.

"Gracious!" the would be purchaser ejaculated as the rug sizzled, giving off a little smoke and an odor of burning.

"Don't worry," the salesman remarked, as he threw the coal back into the grate and pointed to a charred spot as big as a half dollar right in an especially light portion of the creamy woolen ground, whereupon, with his hand, he brushed all the burnt part away, and the rug looked as if it had never been through any modern ordeal of fire. Perhaps the pile was an eighth of an inch shorter, that was all, and, besides, the untrained eye could not observe that small defect.

"A Persian rug that will not stand the fire test is not worth your attention, madam," the clerk declared as he took down the lady's order for the genuine Persian rug.

THE BEAUTY MAKING CARROT.

New Ways of Serving a Vegetable Supposed to Give Good Looks.

Although the carrot has long stood at the head of the dietary that is supposed to make for beauty, it has never been a popular vegetable, even with the most ardent beauty seekers. To make it a culinary delight as well as a beauty maker has been the subject of many experiments.

Four young housekeepers have formed a club for the better understanding of carrot possibilities. One luncheon and one dinner are given each week, at which some new carrot dish must be served. A prize will be given for the most successful dish.

So far the best effort in this line has been a preparation of ordinary creamed carrots filled into green peppers. The top was covered with buttered breadcrumbs and the whole placed in a moderate oven.

When there was a tender, brownish crust on the peppers the dish was ready to serve. Accompanied with brown bread, sandwiches and olives, the course was a decided hit.

The young housekeepers found that while a dish of plain mashed carrots as an accompaniment to roast duck would be eyed with distinct scorn the same mashed carrots shaped to simulate a large oyster, dipped in beaten egg and breadcrumbs and dropped into deep fat, are eaten with as much relish as broiled fresh mushrooms. These young housekeepers have also found that mashed carrots molded into the form of croquettes and fried gain in palatability.

A SEARCHLIGHT.

Some Questions For Women to Ask Themselves.

Ask yourself these:

Am I too negative, too compliant? Do I not need to cultivate positiveness in my character?

Do I confuse foolish sentimentality with a strong, self respecting, ennobling affection?

Are my ideals so impracticable that they never enter into my actual life and beautify the real things around me?

Do I belittle myself with the petty idea that housework is degrading? Am I so blind that I cannot see that it is the character and not the scrubbing brush that sets the standard?

Have I tried to make my voice as musical as possible, and is my desire to look well a sincere wish to give pleasure to others?

Am I strong and courageous enough to remain single, rather than compromise in marriage by giving my trust to a man I cannot honestly admire and respect?

Do I try to keep myself alert and interesting by keeping in touch with the movements of the day and understanding civic and governmental affairs? Or do I confine myself wholly to the reading of the bargains and murder trials?

Am I content to stand exactly where I stood a year ago? Or is it my ideal in life to work on toward a more patient wisdom and a wider life every day?

NURSERY NOTES.

The firstborn is fortunately born if his young mother has wisely resolved to go slowly with infant theories and feel her way carefully and never go to extremes.

For the first week or two the child requires but slight attention. He must be bathed, dressed, fed and kept warm. Otherwise, for the most part, he is best when left alone, gradually to learn that he is alive and make use of his organs and senses.

He requires no handling save that which is necessary during the process of bathing and dressing, with an occasional turning from side to side. More than this is not good for him.

Then he must be kept warm. To do this it is not necessary to overburden him with wraps or keep the room at a hothouse temperature. If you do, you will have a baby as tender as a forced plant.

Select the clothing with a view to combined lightness and warmth. If the weather is at all cool, be certain that each little garment is warm before putting it on the body. Do not put the socks on while the feet are cool. First warm the little members with your own warm hands or by an open fire. Warm the hands in the same way and, if necessary, draw over them a pair of worsted mittens and let them remain for awhile until entirely warm.

For an Old Time Room.

They were at a utility table at a charity bazaar, and everybody seemed to ignore them, to consider them probably only two ugly little bands of white crocheted cotton with a cord running through the scalloped edge on one side, but when Miss M. discovered them among a pile of iron holders and dust cloths she bought them without even asking the price, and in her joy at getting them she would probably have paid $5 for them as readily as she did 50 cents.

"Just what I have wanted for ages," she sighed with satisfaction as she hugged her little bundle close to her side and departed with her chum.

"What are they—wash rags?"

"Hushers."

"Whatever are they?" demanded her friend.

"Easily telling you're not from New England," replied Miss M., who then explained the mission of hushers. "They slip over the edges of soap dishes and other articles of the washstand furnishing and, as their name suggests, deaden all noise. They are quaint and old timey and will give just the finishing touch to my colonial bedroom."

BACKACHE AND DESPONDENCY

Are both symptoms of organic derangement, and nature's warning to women of a trouble which will sooner or later declare itself.

How often do we hear women say, "It seems as though my back would break." Yet they continue to drag along and suffer with aches in the small of the back, pain low down in the side, dragging sensations, nervousness and no ambition.

They do not realize that the back is the main-spring of woman's organism and quickly indicates by aching a diseased condition of the feminine organs or kidneys, and that aches and pains will continue until the cause is removed.

MISS LENA NAGEL

made from native roots and herbs has been for many years the most successful remedy in such cases. No other medicine has such a record of cures of feminine ills.

Miss Lena Nagel, of 117 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:—"I was completely worn out and on the verge of nervous prostration. My back ached all the time. I had dreadful periods of pain, was subject to fits of crying and extreme nervousness, and was always weak and tired. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, and all Organic Diseases. Dissolves and expels Tumors at an early stage. It strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache and Indigestion and invigorates the whole feminine system.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

LINGERIE SUGGESTION.

A Charming and Easily Made Swiss Corset Cover.

Embroidered lingerie, especially corset covers, appeal to all women, but comparatively few can afford to buy them at the exorbitant prices charged for handwork in the shops. Even if one can do the work herself, not all women can give the time necessary to the completion of the ordinary type of embroidered corset cover, with its fine satin stitch and eyelet work.

A very dainty and attractive underwaist, however, can be made with comparatively little work from dotted swiss, with certain of its dots covered with mercerized cottons.

Choose a swiss with large coin dots and cut it so that the corset cover either opens in the back or else is round in front, with pointed pieces in the back that fold in a surplice effect and are brought around to the front of the waist, where they are fastened under a small bow.

Embroider the dots so they form a pointed effect, broad at the shoulders and ending in a point a little below the bust line. This will probably require about four lines of dots to be covered. Use the dots of the material as a padding and work over them in satin stitch, running the threads in the opposite direction. Use a mercerized cotton.

If one cares for color in her underwear, these dots are very attractive done in pale pink, blue or lavender, but they are equally good and wash better in all white.

Finish the edge of the corset cover in a narrow lace beading and an edging of half inch wide valenciennes lace. Run baby ribbon to match the dots through the beading and have a broader ribbon of the same shade at the waist to draw in the fullness.

These little corset covers are both pretty and have very little work in comparison with their real effectiveness.

MINOR INJURIES.

The Proper Way to Treat Cuts and Bruises.

There are no external applications, such as ointment, liniments or lotions, that will or can "heal" a wound. Nature alone does this, and she can do it in the least possible time when her methods are not retarded.

If a cut or laceration is made with a clean instrument, it is best to dress the wound without even washing off the exuding blood. If the injury was caused by anything not clean or if any foreign matter be present and a suspicion of infection exists, of course the injured surface should be thoroughly cleansed. In the absence of an antiseptic solution plain hot water may be used and the particles of dirt or grit removed with a new needle or wooden toothpick, says Mother's Magazine.

The healing of wounds is often materially interfered with by the application of useless or injurious "remedies" and overattention in the disturbance or changing of dressings. If a wound is perfectly clean and the edges correctly brought together, the only way nature can be assisted is by keeping it so. However, it is sometimes not only advisable, but necessary, to make an application of some kind to relieve severe pain, particularly in children and nervous subjects, and a splendid preparation for this purpose is prepared by rubbing together equal parts of pure carbolic acid crystals and gum camphor till an oily liquid is formed, after which twice the quantity of sweet oil is added. The mixture is nonirritating, antiseptic and is good for any injury, burns and scalds included, that is liable to happen in a family.

It should be kept in a tightly corked bottle and is always ready for use.

TOILET HINTS.

A tiny sore at the corner of the lips should be at once well powdered with boracic acid powder and kept covered with it until it disappears.

A red nose is much benefited by bathing in really hot water night and morning. Dry very thoroughly afterward, more especially in the morning if the weather is cold.

A little olive oil, if gently rubbed on any irritating spot, will generally allay the irritation. Eczema spots, which sometimes appear in cold weather, soon disappear if treated with it.

For a corn a vinegar bread poultice soon effects a cure. Steep a little bread in vinegar for two or three hours, make a poultice, bind on the corn at night and keep on till the morning. After one or two nights' treatment the corn will drop out.

After doing dirty work do not at once wash the hands in water. First rub a little grease well into the skin, more especially the dirty parts. Mutton fat is excellent. Then wash in the usual way. The grease loosens the dirt, and hands treated in this way will never become ingrained with dirt.

A Sewing Lesson.

To apply insertions by machine baste the lace on the material; then run a row of machine stitching as close to the edge as is possible. Cut the goods from under the insertion, leaving sufficient edge to turn back and sew down.

Bloomer trousers may be finished without the rubber at the knee, to which many mothers object on account of its interfering with the circulation. As a substitute a narrow band may be used as a finish, and into it a short fitted lining and the full bloomer should be stitched.

For children from two to four years of age the animal plushes make serviceable and warm winter coats. Perhaps the most popular of these materials is the bearskin, which comes in a number of different colors.

Eton's Odd Punishment.

A new form of punishment has been adopted at Eton College. Offenders against the school rules have now to write a certain number of "lines" with the left hand. The scheme has met with general approval among the governing body, though it is said that some boys would rather be birched than have to undergo the new penance.

The headmaster, the Hon. and Rev. E. Lyttelton, who is a great believer in ambidexterity, is of opinion that everyone should be taught to use the left hand. If the left side was not as active as the right, the left side of the brain was affected. Writing with the left hand would have a good effect upon the brain, and there would be no such thing as writer's cramp. The boys will not be kept in school longer than they were formerly, and the number of lines allotted will be much fewer.

A number of boys, it is said, are practising the art of writing with the left hand during their leisure time.

Farm for Street Beggar.

Through the generosity of a certain woman and man, Charles Ansell, 50 years old, who was charged at Willesden, England, a few weeks ago with singing in the street for alms, took first-class passage with his wife and three children on the steamship Pomeranian for Manitoba, where there is a farm waiting for him to take possession.

When Ansell was brought before Ald. Wright his appearance favorably impressed the magistrate, and Robert Marshall, the court missionary, was asked to investigate the case.

It was ascertained that Ansell was a steady, industrious man and had served under Lord Roberts in India and elsewhere. His wife and three children were starving.

A well-to-do woman took an interest in the unfortunate family, and her husband presented them with a farm of about 200 acres near the town of Minnedosi, Canada.

Invalid Averts Eviction.

Exciting eviction scenes were witnessed near Dublin when the house of a widow named Maher was raided by bailiffs and twenty policemen.

Barricades placed in front of the house were broken down, and the police then effected an entrance by breaking the windows and the door. They removed the furniture, but afterward a doctor certified that one of the inmates of the house, a woman 95 years old, was an invalid, and that her life would be imperiled by the eviction.

The High Sheriff was appealed to, and he ordered the furniture to be taken back. This was done, and the barricades were again erected.

POLITICS IN ALBERTA.

Candidates Lining Up Already For the Next Election.

Alberta's voting force in the next Parliament of Canada will total seven, and already candidates are lining up in the various constituencies.

A new constituency, taking in a great expanse of territory, is Victoria, and rumor tells us that Duncan Marshall, manager of The Edmonton Bulletin, and the prince of stump orators in Sunny Alberta, will be the Liberal nominee. Marshall, who is known to most people in Ontario, "caught on" very quickly in the West, and an announcement that he is going to talk, fills a building.

Dr. McIntyre, the present member for Strathcona, will surely be a candidate again. J. R. Lavell, ex-M.P. for one of the Lanarks, is now practicing law in the city of Strathcona, and he is mentioned as the man who will carry the Borden banner.

Scramble For Nomination.

In Red Deer there is already a scramble for the Liberal nomination. J. T. Moore, M. P. P., once a Toronto alderman, and the man after whom Moore Park, a Toronto suburb, is christened, has a strong following. "John T.," as he is best known here, is an orator. Words fall from his lips as freely as water passes over the Falls at Niagara. He is ambitious. Another Red Deer man, George V. Smith, a native of Nova Scotia, is eager to wave the Liberal flag.

The Tories of the Red Deer riding seem to favor Gillmor of Lacombe, son of a former Commons' representative for one of the Middlesexes. Cornelius Hiebert, one of the two Tories sitting in the Alberta Legislature, also has his eyes on the Ottawa seat.

Chosen by Patriarch.

By the way, it is said that Robertson, the Tory leader in the Alberta Legislature, was chosen by the patriarch of the House, J. P. Marcellus of Pincher Creek. Robertson and Hiebert, who constitute the party, left the choice to Marcellus, a red-hot Liberal, who claims to be a descendant of the Romans.

Calgary is now represented at Ottawa by Maitland S. McCarthy, a relative of the late D'Alton McCarthy. He was elected an M. P. after less than two years' residence in the West.

He is generally admitted to be the strongest man in the party in Alberta, and is mentioned as leader of the forces in the next provincial election. That he will again contest Calgary is certain, and that he will be opposed by Dr. Stewart, who was the Liberal candidate in 1904, is also admitted.

Frank Oliver is a strong force in Alberta, and this province is pretty certain to give him at least five out of seven seats.

FOOTING IT TO VANCOUVER.

Seventy-Four Year Old Tramp Seeks Pleasures of Outdoor Life.

Sergeant McLellan of Port Arthur had a queer character at the police station recently. He was a regular Rip Van Winkle of the up-to-date type. The man's name is Robert Henderson, and he hails from a town near Edinburgh, Scotland. He states that he is now 74 years of age.

When he was seen by a scribe in the police station he certainly presented an odd appearance. His feet were wound up in canvas bags, to take the place of boots. For clothing he had two pairs of overalls and an old coat. His hat was a home-made affair, being an old felt hat with large ear flaps sewed on.

Quit Work Years Ago.

Henderson stated that he quit doing hard labor four years ago, and since that time has done nothing but tramp around the country. He has been half through the States, and he is now taking a walk from Montreal to Vancouver.

"I left North Bay on New Year's Day, and since that time I have been on the tramp between that place and Port Arthur. I scorn a ride on the cars, and I have walked every step of the way. At night I usually make my quarters in shacks along the line."

"What do you do for food?" asked the scribe. "I live principally on the stuff that is thrown out of the dining cars, and sometimes I beg a meal by the way. That food agrees with me better than anything else. Owing to the fact that I have no teeth I cannot eat meat or other hard foods, therefore I do not appreciate that kind of food. If I should take steak I would have to swallow it whole, and it is just like a piece of leather to me."

"How long is it since you have worked?" asked the scribe.

Would Sooner Travel.

"I did a little work over four years ago. Work does not agree with me, I cannot stand the confinement. It would kill me. When I used to work the people who hired me thought that when I took a job I was always looking after my own interests and not after my employer's, and, therefore, I did not last long. I would sooner travel, however, as I always feel all right outside."

When the sergeant suggested that he go on the hill for a few weeks until the weather moderated the old fellow stated that it would kill him. He could not stand the confinement. "I must go on," he remarked.

His hair is long and his whiskers are matted, and from appearances it is not likely the man has used a comb for several years. He states that he has no destination in view, but that he is merely on his way.

ARMY IMMIGRANTS.

General Booth's Proposal to Purchase Land In Ontario.

In connection with the recent visit of General Booth of the Salvation Army it transpires that the great organization of which he is the head laid before the Ontario Government some months ago a colonization scheme of considerable magnitude. In advancing the tentative plan, the Army pledge on their part the utmost care and effort toward success. Briefly the plan contemplates the setting aside by the Government of ten townships suitable for agriculture in the northern Ontario "clay belt," and preferably townships that would be tapped by the Transcontinental Railway. The area would aggregate some 230,000 or 250,000 acres of land. It is not asked by the Army that this shall be given free. They are reported, however, to have suggested Government aid in this connection to the extent of obtaining the land at somewhat less than the fifty cents per acre usually charged settlers in those districts, and also that payment be extended over a period of years, probably ten, without interest. The price they offer, it has been estimated in Government circles, would pay for the cost of the necessary surveys of the townships.

If the plan goes through the Army will undertake to settle on the usual sized locations—160 acres—immigrants of the very best selected class. In this regard the Government would co-operate very closely by selecting a number of experienced men who would assist members of the Army staff in locating the settlers, building suitable homes, clearing the land, and teaching the rudiments of agriculture.

The settlement would be gradual; there is no idea of bringing in thousands of people together and having them live in tents or rough shanties. As a further aid to the settlers there will be the new experimental farm for New Ontario, the site for which was selected some time ago, and which will be a sort of agricultural headquarters. For a considerable time after location began the settlers would, it is believed, be able to make enough money from the pulpwood on the lands and in railway construction work to help them considerably toward becoming permanent citizens of the country. At no time would they be left to their own resources, but would always have the experienced assistance mentioned at hand.

Pensions For Mothers.

In an interesting article on old-age pensions in the current number of The Empire Review, Mr. A. C. Brownlow declares that the class of the community which deserve pensions most are the wives of working men—the women who, on a wage of sometimes less than 20s. a week, have brought up a large family.

"Without the mother where would the nation be?" he asks. "Yet what is the State doing at present for the mothers of England? Surely these women above all others should be able to look forward to a period of rest after fighting the battle of life.

"With a State pension how much lighter would the burdens of the working man's wife become? What an influence for good would she be in her old age to the young mothers of a rising generation, instead of as at present a drag on the energies of her offspring, young people who ought to be able to give all their time and devotion to their own families."

GOD'S WAY OF JUDGING

OBSCURITY AND TOIL OFTEN THE PRELUDE OF WEALTH.

CHRIST'S METHOD WITH MEN

The World Is Often Indifferent and Neglectful—Keen Struggle the Lot of Some of Its Honored Children—Jesus Chose to Be Obscure—Fickleness of Society—Lessons From the Story of Zaccheus.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 28.—That God's way of judging men and choosing them for some special task is totally different from man's way is emphasized in this sermon, the text of which is taken from Luke xix, 5, "To-day, I must abide at thy house."

It is amazing how long the world compels some of its most honored children to struggle amid the quicksands of poverty, obscurity, misrepresentation and slander before it allows them to climb the mountain tops of immortality and fame. It is hard to understand why some men have to spend so much of their lives fighting for a mere existence when they would have been able to do so much more good for their fellow men if the world had only been willing to encourage them instead of turning the cold shoulder upon them. Every one remembers the famous couplet by the poet Heywood:

Seven cities warred for Homer being dead,
Who living had no roof to shroud his head.

Well, that is the history of many of the world's greatest heroes and heroines. For years and years they battled with poverty. For years and years they had to fight for mere physical existence. Then came wealth, fame, position, honor. The world was bowing at their feet to do their bidding.

The lot of the obscure peasant is necessarily hard, yet when Christ was to come into the world it was that lot he chose, as if he desired to know by experience the sorrow and hardship of humanity. Christ for thirty years had lived in poverty and obscurity. When at last he started forth on his world's mission he was opposed at every step. He was maligned and slandered. Then there came a sudden change which placed him on the top wave of popularity. We find him no longer the unknown peasant. All his countrymen are talking of him, and many of them call him a great teacher. His fame, too, has gone abroad, and certain Greeks have asked to see him. He is now on his way to Jerusalem, where he will be acclaimed as the Son of David. He has reached Jericho, and the people turn out to see the young prophet who may prove to be the long expected Messiah.

Who will have the honor of entertaining him? To which home does he go? He can practically go and lodge in any home that he will. Does he go to the home of the good and pure man? Does he go to the home of the aristocrat? No; he goes to the home of a despised publican. When Christ stops and looks up and sees the despised publican Zaccheus perched upon the overhanging bough of a sycamore tree, he seems to say. "Come, Zaccheus! Come down! Come and let me go home with thee! Come and let me teach the world that my mission is to save souls which are lost! Come and let me lodge with one who is universally ostracized by his countrymen! Come down, Zaccheus! Come down! For to-day I must abide at thy house!" Now, why did Christ choose to visit Zaccheus' home in preference to all the other homes of Jericho which would gladly have opened their doors to receive him as their honored guest?

Christ lodged in Zaccheus' house in the first place because it was the most despised home in all Jericho. It represented all that was bitter and cruel and tyrannical and unjust. It represented extortion and dishonesty. It represented the fiendish power which would take a community in its vise-like grip and squeeze the last drop of financial blood out of a man and then turn him out of his home and let him starve. Murderer, thief, destroyer, assassin, hangman, were names honored and respected by the Jews in comparison with that word "publican." It was a name the most hated of all names in the Hebrew language. There was no indictment more opprobrious which could be hurled against Christ than that he was a friend of publicans and sinners, for of all sinners the worst sinner in Hebrew eyes was the publican. In order to understand why the house of Zaccheus was the most excoriated in all Jericho we must study for a little while the attitude of the Roman government toward its provinces.

The Roman government was like the Turkish government. In the capital of Constantinople sits the "sick man of Europe." He opens the map of his kingdom and says: "Here is one of my provinces. I will sell this to the highest bidder. Then I will make the tax collector of this province pay me a certain amount each year. All the moneys he can squeeze out of those people above that amount he can have for himself." So, the Sultan sells his provinces, just as a capitalist would rent a farm. Then the tax collector goes to that province, and he puts the financial thumbscrews upon those people.

Such was the province of Judaea in the time of Christ. The Roman government had stationed its tax collectors everywhere. It had sold these provinces and cities to the different buyers. That the Hebrew must bear, but he was humiliated when one of his own people stooped to thus serve the tyrant. Zaccheus was one of these publicans, with his headquarters at Jericho. He was one of Rome's tax collectors, and he bled the people until they could be bled no more. And because he had been an extortioner, a legalized robber, the people hated him with an unutterable loathing. They regarded him and his family as social outcasts.

Now, Christ by going to this despised tax collector's house practically said: "Even to the lowest of the low I shall carry my gospel. No man or woman has sunk so deep into the mire of sin but my blood can cleanse him from all sin. Zaccheus, make haste and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house." Oh, my friends, is it not a blessed thought to you that Christ came to save the publicans and the sinners? Is it not a glorious thought that, no matter how low a man or a woman may be in sin, Jesus is ready and willing to rescue him or her from that sin?

Some time ago it was my privilege to attend a revival service held by a well known slum worker. After the talk was over he asked all who would to come forward and confess Christ. They came by scores. There were about a hundred of them. Some were filthy and ragged. Some were without collars. Some of them had their breath smelling vile with liquor. As they came forward to the mercy seat I kept saying to myself: "I wonder if those men are in earnest. I wonder if those men truly want Christ." Then I bethought myself of a conversation I had with one of my elders a few days before. He said: "Ten years ago I was in the Pacific Garden mission. To my left, on one of the front seats, sat a man so maudlin drunk that I did not think he understood one word that was said. He was the lowest kind of an outcast. When the invitation to come to Christ was given, that man arose and staggered forward and fell on his knees and then and there gave his heart to Christ. He was sincere, too, for he is now working as an evangelist. His name is Melville Trotter." It is not surprising that the elder's story came to my mind that night, for the man whose pleadings had drawn that dissipated crowd to their knees was the Melville Trotter whose conversion the elder had witnessed. No wonder his invitations were so confident. He knew that the Christ who had saved him could save all who came to him. That is why Christ saves the worst cases. It encourages others to come to him. That is why he went to be a guest at the house of Zaccheus.

I take a step further in my subject and declare that Christ went to the home of Zaccheus for another reason. He wanted to prove to the world that some of the sinners who have been swept off their feet by great temptation are sometimes the easiest men to reach and lead to the better life. A man may be a thief and a robber or even a murderer and yet not be wedded to his sins. He may long to become pure and true and honest and upright. Zaccheus was a publican. Zaccheus was a dishonest tax collector. But Zaccheus was one who, at the first salutation of Jesus, was willing to come down from that sycamore tree and welcome the master to his home. That is the type of sinner who can be most easily reached for Christ by us in the present day.

Again, I believe that Zaccheus was at heart an honest man and wanted to do right. When a man is converted and says to Christ, "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation I restore to him fourfold," he gives good evidence that he had primarily been of an honest nature. Then perhaps it was his honesty that led the Romans to offer the office of tax collector to him. Perhaps the Roman officials came to him and said: "Zaccheus, would you not like to be the tax collector for the city of Jericho? You know everybody. You know just how much they are worth. You can make more out of it than anybody else." "Oh, no," I think I hear Zaccheus say, "I do not want the position. It is one of the meanest and most contemptible positions on earth." "I know it," says the Roman governor, "but, remember, somebody has to take this position, and if you take it think of all the money you can make and how rich you can leave your family. You had better take it, Zaccheus." Then in a moment of great temptation, perhaps, Zaccheus fell. Do you not think he ever regretted that he took that position? And when Jesus called him back to the better life do you wonder that he gladly climbed down out of that sycamore tree and asked Christ into his home? Do not make the mistake of thinking that a great sinner never has a desire to come back to the better life.

How many men are there whom, like Zaccheus, you might lead to Christ? Here is one whom you call a stony hearted, brutal saloon keeper. You think he is brutal, but he is not. There never was a man who loathed the curse of liquor more than he loathes it. If you talked to him, you might find that he drifted into the whisky business as thousands of whisky dealers have done. They honestly tried to find other employment, but could not. Then in a spirit of desperation they took employment in a saloon. Before they knew it they commenced to make lots of money. But in the midnight hour, in the darkness of their rooms, some of these saloon keepers have realized again and again that the road they are taking to fortune is marked by tombstones and coffin lids and open graves. Only too willing would thousands of the saloon keepers be to turn their backs upon the evil traffic if they only knew a way to get out. If you, O man, would accost some of these modern saloon keepers as Christ saluted Zaccheus, you might lead them to the better and truer life, even as the publican of old turned his back upon his dishonest tax collecting.

Or take another case. Here is a plain, honest, simple farmer from one of the country districts elected to the Legislature. He is not at heart a bad man. He has always tried to lead a simple, honest, true, faithful life. He goes to the capitol. His term of office is drawing to a close. He has a big mortgage on his farm. He has tried for years to lift that mortgage, but it is an impossibility. Just as the session of the Legislature is nearing an end a railroad corporation tries to push through a bill to grab some land for its private use. That farmer knows the bill is wrong. But one day the lobbyist or representative of the railroad comes to him and says: "We need your vote to pass that bill. We k you are opposed to its passage. B you can change your mind and for it we will give you five one-t sand dollar bills. That $5,000 will pay off your mortgage and leave y farm free of debt, and you can m an easy living for the rest of y life." The farmer looks at the mo He struggles against the tempta and at last yields. At once the ne papers open their broadsides aga him. His good reputation is gone. you not believe this modern Zacc ever regrets what he has done? you not believe he is regretting dishonest acts now? If you accost as Christ greeted the publican of do you not believe you might him to the better and truer life

But, again, I think that Christ w to the house of Zaccheus to prove the world that he wishes to save rich man in his palace as well as poor man in his hut. He wants to the Saviour of Dives in his mansi as well as the beggar Lazarus in rags. The story of Zaccheus pro this. Was Zaccheus a poor man? N "Behold, there was a man nam Zaccheus, which was the chief am the publicans, and he was rich." Y whenever you think of Zaccheus must think of him living in a m sion. You must think of him dres in the most expensive robes. Y must picture him having all t money can buy. It was to Zacche a rich man, that Christ carried gospel.

But though Christ came to save t rich man, how hard it is to preach pentance and faith and judgment come to the merchant prince and the man who rides in a carriage a to one who has scores of servants run at his bidding! It is easy enou for me to go to a murderer in his ce just about to be executed for h crimes, and beg him to trust in Jes who saved the dying thief on t cross; but, oh, how hard it is for o to go to the rich man and say: "M chant, with you gold; lawyer a doctor, with your lucrative practic statesmen, sitting in senatorial ha and in gubernatorial chair, Chr came to save the rich man. He ca to save the aristocrat. He came save Zaccheus. He came to save yo Oh, ye wealthy Zaccheuses, bulwa ed up in your gold, will you not b lieve Jesus came to save you, ev you?"

In all probability you have hea the old story about Rowland H many years ago preaching upon t outskirts of London. A great mul tude was gathered about the popul preacher. While he was preachi there drove to the outskirts of t crowd the carriage of the noted ar tocratic beauty, Lady Erskine. Su denly Rowland Hill in his blunt w stopped and said: "Now, brethre we are going to have an auction sal We are going to sell the soul of La Erskine, who is here, to the highe bidder. 'Who will bid first for th soul?' 'I will,' cried the world. 'Wh will you give for this soul?' 'I wi give riches and honor and pleasu and fame.' 'Is that all?' 'Yes, that all.' 'Who is the next bidder?' 'I am says Satan. 'I will give all the kin doms of the earth. I will make m bow down to her. I will give her fu license for all her evil desires unt she reaches the grave.' 'Is that all 'Yes, that is all.' 'Who is the next bi der?'" cried Rowland Hill. 'I am says Christ. 'What will you give?' will give peace and joy on earth. will give her many years of usefu ness to mankind. Then I will giv her eternal joy and life and peace b yond. I will give her a crown th shall never fade.'" Dramatic wa that. Oh, yes, Only a Rowland Hil dared preach such a gospel to a prou aristocrat. But what Rowland Hi said was true. Over every rich ma as well as over every poor these thre forces are struggling. Christ wants t save the aristocrat just as much as h wants to save the poorest peasan Zaccheus was a rich man.

There is a beautiful legend tol about Zaccheus which goes thus Long after his conversion he co tinued to live in Jericho. He live there until he became a very old ma and till his hair became as white a the driven snow. Then in his old ag he took upon himself a very curiou habit. Every morning he would tak a pail and go off alone for a walk and stay away two or three hours. H would come back with a smilin countenance, as though he had bee with Christ. When his grownu daughter would ask him where h went, he would answer nothing. Bu one day his daughter followed him She saw her old father go to the out skirts of the town to an old sycamor tree. When he got there, he took hi pail and filled it with water and wa tered the roots of the tree. Then he plucked up the weeds about this old tree and kissed it and caressed it. Then he knelt down and prayed by it. When the daughter saw him doing thus, she said, "Father, why are you loving that old sycamore tree?" Then the old man said: "Why, daughter, don't you know? This is the most sacred place on earth to me. It was under this tree that Jesus spoke to me."

My friends, that is only a legend, but has not that legend any message for you? Christ is speaking to you now. He would abide at your house and control your life and fill your heart. Come down from your high station, from your pride or from your despair. He condescends to plead with you. Open wide your doors, give him welcome and learn what a blessing comes to the man whose home has Christ for an inmate.

Alligator As Food.

There is reason to believe that the flesh of a young boiled alligator is barely distinguishable from veal, says an English traveler. It is probably cleaner and more tender than much of the meat of the animals that are usually consumed as food on the continent or in the east end of London. I have never desired to taste the flesh of alligators, cooked or uncooked. But in India I have seen the Sontals and other casteless natives greedily devour the flesh of an alligator without waiting to cook it. The flesh was very pale in color and probably was much superior to the flesh of snakes and rats and such like vermin which form the ordinary food of the predatory Sontal when hunting in his native woods.

ODDFELLOWS HAD A FINE CHURCH PARADE.

THREE LINKERS MADE A GALLANT SHOW, HEADED BY BAND AND CANTON — EARNEST AND PRACTICAL SERMON BY REV. A. M. HUBLY ON "FRIENDSHIP, LOVE AND TRUTH."

Yesterday was the 88th anniversary of the founding of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, and, to commemorate the day, and in accordance with an ancient custom, the brethren in this city yesterday attended divine service in a body. This year the church selected was Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal, the sermon being preached by the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly. The men of the three links were out in goodly force, and with the handsome uniforms of the Patriarchs Militant, and bright regalia made a gallant show. The Oddfellows' band, of course, headed the procession, playing in admirable form and with fine effect. The sacred marches played were inspiring and during the offertory in the church service the Band gave a selection which was listened to with much pleasure. The church choir was out in full force, and the members did themselves infinite credit. Rev. Mr. Hubly began his sermon by welcoming the Oddfellows to the church, calling them, by a happy little slip of the tongue, "members of the Independent Order of Good Fellows." He afterwards apologized for the slip, which, as he said, was not so far out of the way, after all, though entirely unintentional. They were very welcome to Emmanuel church. Its people were not great in numbers, but they worshipped a great God. He then took as his text John 15; 13-15:

> "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend,' etc.

The very essence of perfect manhood, the preacher said, was expressed in the motto of the I. O. O. F., Friendship, Love and Truth. These terms form the three links of a chain which bind together the human and divine. They form a trinity in unity, easily comprehended, sought for and expected in and among men, and yet so rare that to find it at all is to find, in very word and deed, an "Oddfellow.' The first link in the chain, friendship, was typical of Jesus, the God-man, the friend of sinners: the Great High - Priest, mediator and advocate, and the Righteous Judge on the throne in Heaven. Friendship, Love and Truth were sister graces, and to separate one from the other would mean death to each. Friendship embraces Love, and these without Truth would soon die and decay in the stench of their own carnality. Unsanctified friendship is a dangerous thing. Addison said: "The friendships of the world are oft confederacies in vice, or leagues of pleasure." The recent Thaw trial, the preacher said, had given to the world a revelation of an all too common sort of friendship. There we saw people of talent, education, wealth and social influence, men and women of more or less refined and generous tendencies, some of them living in an environment of artistic grandeur, surrounded by beauty and distinction, and yet perpetrating the vilest acts against each other. There was friendship prostituted to deception and lust. How beautiful the way to hell can be made by sin in the garb of friendliness! The lessons of the Thaw trial taught us that the unregenerate heart of man was deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. Beneath the culture of our boasted Christian civilization is oft revealed a satanic domain, a world of baseness and wickedness unspeakable. It is apparent that man, made in the image of his Maker, with all the glorious possibilities set before him by the Gospel, may sink below the level of the beast. It is worth worlds to learn early in life that in Christ Jesus the power and capacity of men for spiritual exaltation are infinite, and that, out of Christ there are just as infinite capacities for damning degradation. "Men and brethren," said the preacher, while speaking to you in this service, by which you commemorate the founding of your noble order, I must remember whose I and and whom I serve, and forget not that I am addressing men for whose salvation the Son of God was crucified." The preacher then eulogized the I.O.O.F., emphasizing the good done by it since its inception, and congratulated the members present on belonging to such a noble organization, but said he would be remiss if he did not remind them of the danger of stopping short of that which constitutes genuine friendship, namely, the desire to bring one's fellow-man to the Saviour. The second link in the Oddfellows' chain was love. John, the beloved apostle, aptly defined that when he said, "God is love." Brotherly love, such as men should feel for each other, would keep the object of its love for the accursed cup, from the saloon and brothel, from sinful pleasure and unprofitable pastime, and from Sabbath desecration. It will wound to heal, and die, if need be, to save. The third link in the golden chain was truth. Truth is eternal. "Let your loins be girt about with truth." Not only in creed, ceremony or the ritual of some society, but in word, in deed, and in life. It may be that some of your fellows are not trying to measure up to the high ideals which your noble order sets before them. This is not a strange thing among the children of men. There are members of churches who do not seem to have meant what they said when they pledged themselves to be true and faithful followers of Jesus Christ. No one could be a good Oddfellow, and at the same time be a bad man, but in Christ alone have the true ideals and principles of Oddfellowship been exemplified, and what a mighty power the I.O.O.F. would be if its 1,600,712 members walked in the footsteps of the Master! What a force for Christian service! What a menace to corruption of all kinds. In conclusion the preacher again complimented the members on the good their grand order had done, and urged them to prove the divinity of their principles by the increasing splendor of their achievements.

Bethel Hall.

Mr. Wm. Pinches, evangelistic from Detroit, preached last night from John 19th, ver. 5: 'Behold the man,' being the words of Pilate when he brought Jesus forth wearing the crown of thorns. The speaker showed the various aspects in which God wants man to behold His Son. First, on the cross as man's substitute, bearing the sinner's sins; beholding him as the Lamb of God the sinner receives life. It is also for the Lord's people to behold Him as He walked and follow in His footsteps. Mr. Pinches preaches next Sunday evening.

Holloway St.

At Holloway St. church the services were well attended. The pastor's topic in the morning was "Need of a model," found in all mechanical and industrial life, and the models of today are far superior. The Old Testament gives us a Joseph whose life and character meets approbation and was a worthy model for Moses, Moses for Joshua, Joshua for David, etc. The New Testament gives us all a Christ the Lord, whose life and teachings gives a Paul and his exemplary life and letters makes possible the text.—Titus 2: 7, "In all things show thyself a pattern of good works." A quartette and the Sunbeam choir gave appropriate selections. In the evening Rev. T. Hambly gave a strong sermon from Isa. 63: 1, "Who is this that cometh from Edom with dyed garments from Bozrah?" Miss E. Price and Douglas Leitch sang a duet, "Forever with the Lord," by Chas Gounod.

SECRETARY OF BOARD OF TRADE HAS BEEN NOTIFIED THAT ROUTE FROM BRIGHTON WILL BE SETTLED ON MAY 15TH.

It will be remembered that at a recent meeting of the local Board of Trade it was resolved that a letter be sent to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, of the Canadian Northern Railway, requesting that, before the route of the railway from Brighton east was decided on, the Belleville Board of Trade be given an opportunity to present its views of the matter.

The letter was sent, as directed, by the secretary, Mr. F. S. Deacon, and that gentleman has just received a communication from Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, stating that, on the 15th of May, the representatives of the C. N. R. will appear before the Railway Commission, at Ottawa, and that the route of the railway from Brighton east well then be settled. If the Belleville Board of Trade wishes to send a committee to appear before the commission at that time they are invited to do so.

It is possible, we are told, that the local Board of Trade, at its next meeting, will appoint such a committee.

Oronhyatekha Is Buried In Cement

FEARED THAT GRAVE ROBBERS ARE AFTER REMAINS OF FAMOUS INDIAN.

To adequately protect the body of Dr. Oronhyatekha, late Supreme Chief Ranger of the Independent Order of Foresters, extraordinary precautions have been taken. Round the shell enclosing the corpse is a two foot wall of cement concrete, the ratio being three parts hard cement, to one part concrete. A piece of rock 6 to 8 inches wide, covers the casket, and a layer of cement of corresponding thickness with the casket's walls covers the whole.

The remains have been sealed, as it was reported to the Executive Council of the I.O.F. that medical students sought the head of the late Supreme Chief for examination. Three young men have actually frequently been seen at midnight in Deseronto cemetery, who are suspected of sinister designs on the corpse. The grave has been so sealed and constructed as to render any further attempt at snatching the body liable to instant detection.

Sneak Thief Made Fairly Good Haul.

BROKE OPEN TRUNK AND STOLE JEWELLERY AND MONEY FROM LOCAL HOTELMAN.

On Friday evening a party arrived in the city and registered at one of the hotels as J. B. Ritchie, Montreal. He left the hostelry about noon on Saturday and shortly after it was discovered that the proprietor's room in the place had been entered, the lock of a trunk picked and valuables extracted. The missing articles consist of one crescent tie-pin, with pearl settings; one 10 karat ring, carved on side and set with a large ruby stone. In addition to the jewellery some $50 in money was taken.

The party suspected is about 42 years of age, 5 feet 7 inches in height, rather stout build, dark complexion, with a peculiarity about the nose, and spoke with an Irish accent. He wore a dark suit of clothes and overcoat and a stiff hat. Ritchie, or whatever his name is, left the city at noon.

The police were notified of the theft and every effort is being made to locate him.

ABUSIVE LANGUAGE.

Mary Seams was charged with using abusive language towards Mrs. D. Callahan. As the plaintiff did not desire to have the defendant fined, a nominal fine of 25 cents and $2.00 costs was imposed.

ALLEGED CRUELTY TO A HORSE.

This was a county case, and ex-Mayor Johnson, a J.P., occupied a seat on the bench with Magistrate Masson. A young man named J. Abbott was charged with cruelty to a horse. The party resides in the township of Sidney. It is alleged that Abbott unmercifully beat a horse he was driving, using a heavy stick as a weapon. Defendant denied using the weapon, and also denied that he treated the animal cruelly. Mr. Anderson for prosecution and Mr. McMahon for the defendant.

After considerable evidence had been submitted and argument heard in the case the accused was acquitted.

Hotelman Convicted On Three Charges.

On Friday last Mr. Hogan, a hotel-keeper at Actinolite, was charged before Mr. Joseph James, J.P., with three violations of the Liquor Act. The evidence showed that the accused had sold liquor during prohibited hours on three different occasions, and a conviction in each case was recorded. The fines and costs imposed amounted to over $100. Mr. P. J. M. Anderson, County Attorney, conducted the case for the Crown.

ITALY FAVORS LIMITATION.

Attitudes of Powers At Coming Hague Peace Conference.

Rome, April 29.—The discussion that has been going on concerning the Italian proposition of the limitation of armaments has served in a measure to elucidate the attitudes of the various powers on this subject.

Great Britain, which is the only country to send a Minister of Foreign Affairs to the conference, is in favor of the discussion, and in this she is thoroughly supported by Spain.

Russia, while insisting on the discussion of its own program of April 12, 1906, agrees with Germany and Austria on the question of armament to the point to referring to it in official documents as "An entente," but Russia is favorable to any step that is likely to result in a correct and reasonable solution of the matter.

Germany and Austria do not favor the limitation of armaments; they will, however, permit the presentation of the proposal, although they are not willing to participate in its discussion.

France, there is reason to believe, is of the opinion that here exists international as well as inter-nation reasons against limitation, but she will allow the presentation of the question. She has not yet decided whether to participate in the discussion or not.

The situation of Italy is delicate and difficult. The general opinion is in favor of limitation, but Germany has called upon her to fulfil the duties of an ally. There is no desire to have a repetition of the Algeciras incident when rightly or wrongly, Germany accused Italy of having deserted her. Consequently Italy is very much interested in bringing about an understanding on this subject prior to the opening of the conference.

ONLY GOT FEATHERS.

Hamilton Sports Outwit Officers When Raid Was Made.

Hamilton, April 29.—The police have a table and a bunch of chicken feathers carefully locked up at No. 3 police station. That is all they got out of a Sunday morning raid on a shed on West King street, near the brickyards. There was a gang of about 60 in the vicinity of the shed, but they got wind of the coming of the police and got out before the police arrived. The officers captured a table and some other paraphernalia, and some chicken feathers. They regard the find as prima facie evidence that there had been gambling and a chicken fight in progress before their arrival. They failed to secure any names.

DOG-TRAIN OF FURS.

Indian and His Dogs Brought Them 300 Miles.

The appearance of a dog-train of furs on Edmonton's main thoroughfare the other morning was a picturesque sight, reminiscent of the frontier days, and one only to be seen at rare intervals now.

The four burly huskies in the train showed signs of fatigue after their long journey of 300 miles from Pelican Rapids, on the Athabasca, accomplished in five consecutive days, with intervals of rest.

Their driver and owner, a square-jawed, capable-looking Indian named Alexandre Dezzerlais, preferred to bring his furs and dogs directly to Edmonton, instead of leaving his dogs at Athabasca Landing, as the average trapper does.

Furs Are Quite Valuable.

His furs include seven coyote skins, six cross-fox, eighteen red fox, two otter, seventeen lynx, ten mink, seven marten, three weasel, one large black bearskin, and five moose skins.

Some idea of the value of Dezzerlais' cargo may be had from the fact that marten skins are worth from $10 to $25 each; mink and lynx, $8 to $9; otter, $15 to $25; cross-fox and coyotes, $3 to $5; red fox, $5 to $7.

With moose skins and bear skins, Dazzerlais' furs will total about $500. A great part of this he will exchange for supplies, and will soon wend his way homeward with his dogs to the silent places of the north.

HINDOO STUDENTS UNEASY.

Race Hatred Fomented In India, Riots Are the Result.

Lahore, British India, April 29.—Rifles and twenty rounds of ball cartridge have been served out to the local volunteers in consequence of signs of marked unrest among the Hindoo student elements.

The publication of inflammatory and seditious articles in the native newspapers, inciting race hatred against the Europeans and demanding native control of the Government of India by means of an elected Parliament, has been followed recently by riots here and elsewhere in the Punjab, and by attacks on Europeans.

Professional and political agitators are now fomenting strikes on the railroads and the government has concluded that it is time to suppress the rioting by forceful means if necessary. The authorities are satisfied that a determined front will speedily end the outward signs of disaffection, especially as they have the unanimous support of the great Mohammedan population, who, at numerous mass meetings, have emphatically condemned the anti-European movement.

Recent events have given a remarkable impulse to enlistment in the volunteers. The recruits include five judges of the supreme court, the director of public instruction, university professors, high Government officials and leading bankers and merchants, all of whom have entered the ranks as privates.

Killed In Prize Ring.

Walsenburg, Colo., April 29.—Thomas Miller, a miner, died Saturday from the effects of a blow on the solar plexus given by Samuel Irons in a prize fight Friday night. Irons was arrested.

Miller's mother became delirious when informed of her son's death, and it is feared the shock may terminate fatally.

NEW PIER COLLAPSES

Big Two-Storey Structure at Baltimore Breaks Away.

Cause Is Unknown — Feared Many Workmen Have Perished — Three Bodies Recovered — Eighteen Suffering From Severe Injuries—Collapse Caused Tremendous Wave Six Feet High.

Baltimore, April 29.—With a roar that terrified thousands and a rush that drove a wave six feet high to distant parts of the inner harbor of Baltimore, nearly half of a new pier under construction at Locust Point Saturday broke away from the shore end and plunged into the water.

Three dead bodies have been taken from the wreckage, five men are missing and their bodies are almost certainly beneath the ruins, and eighteen men are suffering from injuries more or less serious.

The dead includes Howard L. Ellender, civil engineer. The missing are laborers.

It is not certain why the catastrophe occurred. The new pier was being built by the Baltimore Bridge Co., and the McLean Contracting Co., for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and was to have been used by the steamers of the Johnson Line. It was a two-storey structure, 930 feet long, about 500 feet of which was on land.

Plunged Into the Harbor.

The water end was built upon piles, upon which a thick bed of concrete was laid and above this rose the superstructure of steel. The water section of the pier was approaching completion, and was under roof. This section was separated from the land end by a heavy fire wall of masonry. Saturday morning cracklings were heard, and the workmen were called to places of safety. Just as many of them were struggling through the doors in the fire wall, this collapsed, and, with 430 feet of the water end of the pier, plunged into the harbor, carrying a number of men with it. Ellender, the dead civil engineer, who was acting superintendent for the McLean Contracting Co. lost his life in an effort to warn the men of their danger. His body was recovered. Police, firemen and others including Mayor E. Clay Timanus responded quickly to calls for help and everything possible was done to aid the injured and recover the bodies of the dead.

Immigrants Badly Scared.

At the pier adjoining the wrecked structure, was moored the North German Lloyd's steamer Cassel and on board her were a large number of immigrants. The immense wave that followed the plunge of the new pier into the water lifted the Cassel high in the air, dashed her against her pier and was crushed in badly, tore the steamer from her moorings and cast her adrift. The immigrants were for a short time in a state bordering on panic, and two of them jumped overboard, but were rescued. The Neptune line steamer Ripon was also torn from the dock, where she was moored, as was also the Norwegian steamer Fortuna, loaded with steel rails. Her wire hawsers snapped like twine. The harbor is narrow, where the accident occurred, and the wave and its rebound from the opposite shore cast a number of smaller vessels adrift, and caused much confusion for a time.

KILLED BY FALL OF WALL.

Four Dead and Eighteen Injured At Chrome, N. Y.

New York, April 29.—Four men were instantly killed, three others were badly injured, and 15 others were more or less seriously hurt by the collapse of a brick wall at the De La Mar Copper Works At Chrome, N. Y., Saturday.

The victims were all Hungarians. The settlement is chiefly composed of foreigners, and following the falling of the wall there was a wild rush to the vicinity and something like a riot resulted. When the frenzied men and women found they would not be admitted within the walls of the works they stoned the small guard and threatened vengeance. Most of the colony have members of their families working for the company.

Miners Still Entombed.

Johnstown, Pa., April 29.—Despite the fact that 12 large pumps have been in operation for two days at mine No. 27 of the Berwind White Co. at Foustwell, where seven men have been imprisoned since Friday by a flood of water from abandoned workings, so little progress has been made the miners may not be reached until too late to save their lives. All day yesterday the tappings on the compressed air pipes continued. The rescuing party is greatly puzzled over the manner in which these taps are given. Invariably the number is seven.

Stromboli Active.

Catania, Sicily, April 29.—The royal observatory on Mount Etna registers an extraordinary eruption of the volcano on the Island of Stromboli.

The volcano is throwing out large quantities of ashes and cinders, which are damaging vineyards in both Sicily and Calabria.

Naples, April 29.—Frequent slight shocks of earthquake were felt in Calabria yesterday. The populace of Southern Italy, especially in Naples, is fearful lest there be a repetition of the disaster of 1905.

Snow Covers Northwest.

St. Paul, April 29.—An inch of snow Saturday covered the Northwest from Lake Michigan to the Dakotas. Colder weather is predicted.

Famine Acute In Armenia.

St. Petersburg, April 29.—A despatch received here from Tiflis says that the famine is acute in Turkish Armenia, and that hundreds of peasants are dying of actual starvation.

Age does not make us childish, as some say. It finds us true children.—Goethe.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

Engine Leaps Trestle But Passengers Are Not Injured.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 29.—Two trainmen were killed and one hundred passengers had a thrilling escape from death in a wreck on the Wabash Railroad yesterday when the engine and one passenger coach of westbound train No. 27 left the tracks half a mile west of the Bridgeville Station, near here, and plunged into Chartier's Creek, forty feet below. Scores of people were saved by a circumstance which is now regarded as providential. The dead: Marion Boyd, engineman, Rooks Station; Frank McIsaacs, fireman, Barberton, O. The train was crossing a trestle when without warning the engine suddenly leaped from the rails and shot into the stream underneath, carrying the first coach with it. Luckily all the passengers were in the other coaches.

BURNING OIL COVERS BAY.

Fire On Pier Endangers Lives of Many Workmen.

New York, April 29.—Fire on one of the export piers at the foot of North 12th street, Brooklyn, on Saturday did about $100,000 damage and endangered the lives of several score of workmen, employed in the vicinity. Two men leaped into the bay to escape the flames. They were rescued.

When the fire broke out, the pier contained a large number of boxes of petroleum, and numbers of the employes began throwing cases into the river. As the flames spread they hurried to lighters and were towed out of danger.

Burning oil flowed into the bay, and the fire spread over the water for some distance. One lighter caught fire as the oil spread over the waters, and was partly destroyed. Several persons were slightly injured.

POLICE BADLY MAULED.

Have Exciting Time Arresting Man For Theft.

Hamilton, April 29.—Detectives Bleakley and Miller had an exciting time on Saturday afternoon placing Charles Crisp, wanted at Windsor on a charge of theft, under arrest.

They came across their man in a bar room in the M. and M. Hotel, at King William and John streets. There were about fifty men in the bar and when the officers went to make the arrest Crisp's brother and about a dozen others interfered.

There was rough house for a time and the officers were mauled considerably, but came out of the scrap with their men, though they were both scratched and bruised.

Fatal Storm In Texas.

Fort Worth, Tex., April 29.—One village is totally destroyed, extensive damage done to property and crops at other points, and eight lives are known to have been lost as a result of a storm which was general over this state Saturday.

Adopt the Same Policy.

London, April 30.—(C. A. P.)—When the Imperial Conference opens for the discussion of preference on Tuesday, it is stated that the Premiers from Australia and Cape Colony will press their resolutions with vigor, while Laurier and Botha will take the line that it is not for the colonies to dictate a policy to the Imperial Government no more than for the latter to dictate a policy to the colonies.

The Imperial Government will, of course, adopt a nonpossumus attitude in the debate, which will probably extend over more than one sitting. In fact it is anticipated that at the present rate of progress the conference cannot conclude before another fortnight elapses. The keenest interest continues to be manifested in the question here, and appeals are being made from all quarters for publicity.

To the fact that the Premiers have accepted an invitation to luncheon from John Redmond, some signification is attached.

Hit By Elevator.

Toronto, April 30.—A serious accident occurred in The Saturday Night Building yesterday afternoon. A boy, named Charles Pitcher, who lives at 23 Morse street, and is employed in The Saturday Night composing-room, was lounging on the third floor. He had his head bent over the safety wire trellis watching the operations of the elevator. As it came up the weights descended, catching him on the back of the head, and causing a gash almost from ear to ear and laying bare the skull.

He was taken to St. Michael's Hospital.

A similar case was only discharged from that institution in the morning.

Snow In Saskatchewan.

Lumsden, Sask., April 30.—Severely cold weather prevails here. The flood in the Qu'Appelle Valley is passed. All the streams emptying into the Qu'Appelle have fallen. It was eight above zero at nine last night. The sloughs west of the town are filled, and the river is ten feet below the high water mark of 1904. There was a big snowstorm yesterday morning.

Mail Carrier's Trial.

Springfield, Mo., April 30.—The trial of Garland Moore, the mail-carrier, who, in December last, at Boise d'Arc, near here, shot and killed Clara Vest, a young society woman, because she had spurned his attentions, was begun here yesterday.

Shot Dead In His Cabin.

Vancouver, B. C., April 30.—News was received yesterday morning of the murder at Kemano of J. A. Pocklington. He was found in his cabin shot through the head. He was first cousin to Lord Curzon, and the Duke of Portland was his godfather.

LOCAL OPTION BYLAWS.

Quashing Not to Take Place on Mere Technicalities.

Toronto, April 30.—It is reported that the Government has under consideration a definite policy to be pursued in the case of the quashing on mere technicalities of local option bylaws carried in the older sections of the province by the necessary three-fifths majority or more. In respect to New Ontario the veto power contained in the license act gives all the necessary authority required by the Government to deal with the situation. As to the older portions of the province, the situation is not so clear. One report yesterday was in effect that the Government would overcome the difficulty by flatly declining to approve of licenses issued by Boards of Commissioners where the bylaws were quashed on technicalities, provided that the evidence was clear that no improper or wilfully wrong acts could be shown.

Premier Whitney practically confirmed the report that the matter was under consideration when in answer to questions by the newspapermen he said yesterday morning:

"As far as possible some standard should be set beyond which technical objections would not prevail. I am quite satisfied that the judges would welcome something of that kind, and I shall be glad indeed if the Government can aid in bringing about some such standard."

NO CALL FOR PREFERENCE.

Because, Says Australian, Colonies Will More Than Supply Empire.

London, April 30.—(C. A. P.)—Pulsford, an Australian Senator, has issued, in connection with the meeting of the Colonial Conference, a lengthy memorandum upon the question of the preference containing a statement of the economic position as it affects the colonies. Pulsford argues that the demand for a preference cannot be justified in view of the fact that the production of the colonies in nearly all food and natural products will, in a short time, be in excess of the consuming capacity of the Empire.

The Duke of Connaught yesterday gave a private luncheon to the Colonial Premiers and ladies at Clarence House, St. James' Palace. Later there was a reception, and a large number were present.

Age does not make us childish, as some say. It finds us true children.—Goethe.

Escaped In Night Clothes.

Peterboro, April 30.—The residence of George Vanzant, Townsend street, was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning. The loss will be $2,000, partially insured. The residents escaped in their night clothes. Mr. Vanzant lost $100 in cash, which was in a dresser upstairs.

Situation At Fernie.

What Is the Truth About Western Coal Strike?

Despatch Says Men Will Not Return--Ottawa Differs--Testing New Labor Act--How Miners Voted--Serious Situation--Not Jails Enough to Hold the Strikers--Reports of Fuel Famine.

Fernie, B.C., April 30.—The miners, by a referendum vote, have refused to return to work, pending the meeting of the board of arbitration. It is significant that at Fernie, where Mackenzie King explained the law to the miners, the vote was unanimously in favor of returning to work at the old scale until the board can complete its investigations and render a verdict. Mr. King says this shows clearly that if the other camps could understand clearly the effect of the new law they would return to work. The vote was as follows:

Fernie, unanimous for return to work.
Lundbrek, 39 to 19 in favor of resumption of work pending investigation.
Michel, 111 to 67 against.
Colsman, 63 to 74 against.
Frank, 64 to 14 against.
Hillcrest, 22 to 5 against.
Lille, 97 to 7 against.
Bellevue, unanimous against.
Bankhead, 120 to 7 against.
Canmore, 101 to 3 against.

A serious situation is at hand. The labor men themselves seem unable to figure out the situation, and it seems that the leaders are unable to control the men. The whole question is one of faith, and the difficulty now is to do more than outline the fact that there was a breach of agreement somewhere. President Sherman says the men were afraid to go back to work without an agreement, and they had no confidence in the new legislation.

The question of armed men is freely discussed, and miners are angry on account of statements as to enforcement of law by the use of armed troops or the Northwest Mounted Police.

How to Enforce Law.

The next question turns on the enforcement of the law. More than three thousand men are on strike, though they claim to have quit as individuals. They are anxious to learn the attitude the Government will now assume. There is much excitement over rumors of using the mounted police. The authorities are in no position to arrest three thousand men, and the jails are inadequate if the men refused to pay the fines.

The feeling is general that the new law will be given a severe test.

Reports of fuel famine are very general.

What the Government Thinks.

Ottawa, April 30.—The Government has had no advices since Saturday as to the conditions in the western coal fields, but enquiry at the Department of Labor elicits the information that the striking miners were expected to return to work with the exception of those employed by the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company at Michel.

NEW INDUSTRY FOR CANADA.

Chain Trust Will Build Big Plant at Walkerville, Ont.

New York, April 30.—Another United States corporation is about to enter the Canadian manufacturing field so as to escape the Dominion tariff, the Standard Chain Co., known as the "Chain Trust," having decided to build an extensive plant at Walkerville, Ont. The Standard Chain Co., Limited, will operate the new works, which are to be constructed at a cost of $200,000.

Bridge Across Straits.

St. John, N. B., April 30.—N. J. Butler, Deputy Minister of Railways, has not, but will, prepare plans this summer for a bridge across the straits, thoroughly satisfied that the scheme is practical. Captain Joseph Read, M. P. P., Summerside, who from years of experience as marine and shipping master, differs, and says a northwest gale would sweep cars into the ocean, as at Souris breakwater. The entire island is excited, and the supporters of the modern tunnel scheme are ardently at work to connect the troublesome six and one-quarter miles.

Considering this winter's, and the last few months' difficulties in reaching the island, plans of any magnitude will be attempted to better conditions.

Three Babes Found In River.

Chicago, April 30.—A despatch from Elgin, Ills., says: While fishing in Fox River yesterday, Stephen Boras hooked a bundle of clothing which he pulled ashore and found to contain the bodies of three infants, two boys and a girl.

Coroner Norton is of the opinion that the bodies may have been hurled from a passing train. The clothing found with them was of fine quality, but had no marks.

SIR WILFRID MAY GO.

Will Visit the Transvaal If It Is at All Possible.

London, April 30.—(C. A. P.)—The Canadian Associated Press understands that Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised, if he found it possible he would accept Gen. Botha's invitation to visit the Transvaal, but when Sir Wilfrid extended a like invitation to the Transvaal Premier, Gen. Botha replied that it would not be possible for him to leave the Transvaal again for some years.

Sir Wilfrid has accepted an invitation of the London Gaelic Society to a Scottish concert to be given in honor of the Colonial Premiers on May 11.

The freedom of the city will be presented to Sir Robert Bond on Wednesday morning at Guild Hall.

CROSS ATLANTIC IN A DAY.

Aerial Navigation to Shorten Voyage to Twenty Hours.

London, April 30.—Dr. Alexander Graham-Bell said Sunday night that it was only a question of a brief period when the progress of aerial navigation would make it possible to have dinner in America and breakfast the next morning in Europe, covering the distance across the Atlantic in considerably less than twenty hours.

"My expectation," said Dr. Bell, "is that an airship will be perfected capable of making 150 to 200 miles an hour. My opinion, however, is that the next step in aerial flight will take the form of such improvements as will make possible the creation of aerial battleships."

Appointment Was Not Made.

Ottawa, April 30.—At the session of the Ontario Legislature which closed last week an act was passed dividing the judicial district of Nipissing into two parts, with a judge for each. The statute of the Ontario Legislature on the subject, however, only reached Ottawa on Thursday or Friday last, and there was not time to put the matter through before prorogation, and the appointment accordingly will have to stand over till next session.

Anticipate Agrarian Troubles.

St. Petersburg, April 30.—Agrarian troubles are anticipated in the near future. The Governors of the Provinces of Vyatka and Tambov and several other provinces have asked that Cossacks be quartered in the villages which are the centres of the agitation, as they fear the rural guards will sympathize with the peasants and refuse to suppress disorders.

Theft From Stock Farm.

London, Ont., April 30.—Richard Evans was arrested Sunday night by Detectives Egleton and Nichol charged with stealing a horse valued at $250 from the stock farm of Ald. Stoddard, of Buffalo. The farm is located in Nissouri, and it is stated that Evans went there on Saturday night and stole the horse.

Admires Canada's Way.

London, April 30.—(C. A. P.)—Sir Francis Channing, M. P., has an informative article on "Agricultural Education" in the May number of the Fortnightly Review. The manner in which Canadians have applied themselves to the furtherance of agricultural education has Sir Francis' great admiration.

Poured Acid On Boy.

Lethbridge, Alta., April 30.—John Cunningham, a boy of ten years, was maltreated by Norman Steward and Joseph Kakis, employes of W. Whitney, the liveryman. The men got the youngster in a stable and poured carbolic acid on his body. Alarmed by his cries, they then applied water, which increased the pain. They were locked up.

Trainman Killed.

Oswego, N.Y., April 30.—Carlton Meyers, a trainman, was killed, and Thomas Bracken and William Coy, also trainmen, were seriously injured yesterday when an engine and seven loaded cars on the N.Y.C. Railroad ran into an open switch here.

Cattle Poisoning.

Toronto, April 30.—Provincial Detective Rogers left for Caledon Township, in Peel County, yesterday morning, where he is to continue an investigation into some alleged cases of poisoning cattle.

Howard Gould is many times a millionaire. His father was Jay Gould, the railway wrecker, and from him Howard's wealth was inherited. He married Kate Clemens, an actress. She is a very eccentric person and is said to possess a strong will and an energetic way of expressing herself. Her excitable disposition caused her to use abusive language to a leading architect who had exhibited plans for a castle of which Mrs. Gould did not approve and she ordered him from the hotel, declaring that he was a d— architect. The architect asked for $60,000 damages to his reputation. The jury gave him a verdict of $25,000. The judgment was appealed and the jury's finding was confirmed with the additional sum of $3,000 by way of interest. The Goulds will not miss the money and Mrs. Gould will have enjoyed the intense pleasure of having spoken her mind at the cost of nearly $15,000 a word. SOMETHING IN THIS.

Brockville Times; Canadians have over $650,000,000 stowed away in our little savings banks. Of this about $490,000,000 draws interest. If Canadians have not confidence enough in their own schemes to put their cash into them why should the Briton be scored for his caution?

Eye Strain CAUSES Eye Diseases

Eye STRAIN is the cause of most eye diseases. It produces irritation and congestion and a consequent weakness of all the nerves and muscles of the eye. In this way Glaucoma, Optic Nerve Paralysis, Granular Lids, Ulcers, Cataract, etc., are induced. These diseases are not only painful, but if neglected, result in blindness.

The best time to treat eye diseases is in the "eye STRAIN stage," and the most capable and experienced is the man to consult.

If your eyes, or head, or nerves trouble you you may rely upon our Optician for useful and competent advice; whether or not glasses are the medium of relief.

A New Problem For the Railways.

The State Railroad Commission of New York, in a bulletin just issued reports an alarming frequency of broken rails the past winter. For the three months ending March 31, there were 3,014 breakages on the principal lines of the state. The analysis shows that the number of breakages in the 100-lb. rails far exceeded those in previous years, in 80-lb. rails, and altogether the heaviest breakage in rails rolled since 1899.

The same problem faces Canadian railway men and its solution engages the earnest attention of the management, both of the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Companies. They are trying to secure rails that will be unbreakable.

Capt Hunter, one of the greatest authorities on steel rails, was lately in Montreal, conferring with Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, of the C.P.R., and other leading railway men on the matter. What is wanted is a rail that will stand the changes of temperature that cause broken rails, more especially in the early spring, when the frost is coming out of the ground, and the cold below and the warm air above cause such variations in temperature that the metal is peculiarly liable to snap under the sharp pressure of a train. Owing to this February, March and April are the great months for broken rails in Canada; for the rest of the year there is little danger from this source.

According to a Montreal paper the present spring, owing to the depth of frost in the ground, has proved one of the hardest on rails that has been ever experienced, and as a result railway men point to a long list of accidents, the great majority of which were due to broken rails.

It is further observed that while the weight of the rails has increased from forty to eighty, ninety and one hundred pounds per yard the weight of trains has more than correspondingly increased, hundred-ton engines and hundred-thousand pound cars becoming the standard. Whether from this cause or not, experts say that the number of broken rails is greater now than formerly. In making rails for Canadian roads each batch is rigidly tested to secure if possible absolute safety. Samples are frozen with liquid air to a temperature of 200 degrees below zero, and then battered with a trip hammer, and those which do not stand this test are rigidly rejected.

A Tweed Wedding.

THOMPSON — MORTON.

A wedding of more than usual interest to the young people of Tweed was solemnized yesterday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. David Morton, Metcalf street, when their eldest daughter, Elizabeth Jane, was united in marriage to Mr. Alexander Thompson, of Toronto, says the Tweed News. The ceremony was performed at twelve o'clock noon by the Rev. A. Firench in the presence of the bride's nearest relatives and a few of her most intimate girl friends. While Mendelssohn's Wedding March was being played by Mrs. Robt. Elliott the bride entered the drawing room, which was prettily decorated with smilax and carnations, leaning on the arm of her father. Although one of Tweed's most charming and most graceful young ladies she looked unusually bewitching in a gown of white taffeta, trimmed with point d'esprit and Irish crochet. She wore the conventional bridal veil with lilies of the valley and carried in her hand a shower bouquet of the same. The happy couple were unattended. After the ceremony the wedding party adjourned to the dining room where a dainty wedding breakfast was served, the usual toasts to the bride and groom being proposed. The bride was the recipient of many very beautiful and useful presents chief among which was a piano, the gift of the groom. The happy couple left on the 3.30 train for Toronto where they will take up their residence. The bride, who looked quite happy and unconcerned, wore a pretty grey suit with a becoming Tuscan hat. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have the best wishes of their many friends here, a large number of whom were at the station to have a farewell look at the bride and to congratulate the groom, who was for some time a popular resident of Tweed.

SOFTNESS OF SEALSKIN.

Is Rivalled by Human Hair Where Dandruff is Eradicated.

Sealskin is admired the world over for its softness and glossiness; and yet the human hair is equally as soft and glossy when healthy; and the radical cause of all hair trouble is dandruff, which is caused by a pestiferous parasite that saps the vitality of the hair at its root. Newbro's Herpicide is the only preparation that is fatal to the dandruff germ. Without dandruff there is no falling hair, but a luxuriant growth of glossy, soft hair is certain. Scouring the scalp won't cure dandruff. Kill the dandruff germ. Thousands of women owe their beautiful suits of hair to Newbro's Herpicide. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c and $1.00. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

ATHLETICS.

Another Indian "Wonder."

Toronto, April 30.—President Tom Flanagan, of the Irish-Canadian Athletic Club, thinks he has dug up a rival to Longboat, in Adam Henry, another Six Nations Indian, from the Caledonia reserve. Mr. Flanagan spent three days in search of his man, of whom he says:

"I've got a good man, I think. He is 19 years of age, stands 5 feet 7 1-2 inches, and weighs only 100 pounds. He is skinny, but he can run. He did three miles in 15 minutes for me. I had about 20 Indians running for me there. I found out that the Indians away back in the country were faster than the lacrosse players and the Indians who hung around town. Every Indian out there is in training. Since Tom Longboat won the Marathon, all have gone into training. Everywhere you go an Indian clad in a pair of trunks will go tearing by. Every boy you meet, too, is a cousin of Tom's. Tom's mother says that none of them can beat her son. They told me out there that Tom has been training all his life, and that his ambition was to be a prize fighter."

THE GOLDEN RULE.

IT WAS NOT FOLLOWED IN THE CASE OF THIS FARMER.

Toronto Star; "What is that man giving you?" asked one of the officials at the immigration office to a young man who was preparing to go out with a farmer this morning.

"Five dollars a month," was the answer.

"Call in the man who has hired you."

He came, and got his calling, but did not get the young man. In a few minutes he was placed at $10 a month and his board with a family in Muskoka, and goes to-day to the summer resort.

Historic Bibles.

When the New Legislative Assembly of the Transvaal met for the first time at Pretoria, the Committee of the Bible Society provided two Bibles, one in English and one in Dutch, to be used by the members of the Assembly in taking the oath. These books will be suitably inscribed and afterwards presented to General Botha, the first Premier of the Transvaal, as a souvenir of this historic occasion.

LADY CLERKS' SUCCESS.

Displace Nearly 2,000 Male Workers Within Three Years.

The custom of dismissing male clerks and replacing them by cheap lady workers is assuming very serious proportions, not only in the provinces, but in London. Within the last three years, it is estimated by one authority, between 1,500 and 2,500 male clerks have been thrown out of employment in the metropolis, and their positions filled by lady workers. Until recently the movement has been chiefly amongst the smaller firms, but now the larger firms, offices, and companies in the city, whose business makes it imperative to keep large staffs, are beginning to move in the same direction.

Males Get Bounce.

"The competition at present," said the general secretary of National Union of Clerks, recently, "is chiefly amongst shorthand writers, typists, bookkeepers and private secretaries. I have several cases brought to my notice recently in which men have been dismissed wholesale and replaced by lady workers. The change, of course, is said to have been brought about on the score of economy. The male clerks receive on the average from 30s. to 45s. per week; the young ladies generally receive from £1 to £1 10s. per week — about two-thirds the salary of the male workers.

Do They Equal Men?

"If the lady clerks are equal to the men—and this is a matter for discussion—then they should certainly receive the same wages. What my association is insisting upon is that women should not accept positions under a minimum salary, and that this should be equal to a man's salary. In shorthand, writing and typing work I quite admit that the average woman is quite equal to a man, but in bookkeeping, for instance, where exceptional qualities are required, she seems to be much inferior.

"I heard of a firm in the city who a short time back dismissed all their male clerks and substituted ladies, but after a short time the firm became so disgusted with the lack of discipline shown by the girls—if some of them were spoken to they shed tears—that they were glad to revert to their old custom."

Care of Baggage In England.

"So you are going abroad, eh?" said a railroad man. "Well, watch your luggage over there. The system is abominable.

"They don't, you know, have our simple and satisfactory check system. In England, for instance, no one is responsible for your luggage but yourself. You get a porter to put it in the baggage car, and when you reach your destination you pick it out with another porter's help, put it on a cab and drive off. Anyone could steal it. Often luggage thefts occur.

"I often wondered why the English railroads, which in many respects are so good, didn't adopt our American check system. Last year, asking an English railroad man, I found out.

"If the English roads adopted the check system they would be responsible for luggage, as our roads are. The English law does not make them responsible. Therefore, of course, they do nothing that will lay such a responsibility upon them. But they acknowledge that our luggage system is fine, while theirs is execrable. And they have a registering system—a mere begging of the question—for which you have to pay extra."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Muscles vs. Brains.

"The muscles are of primary importance, brains of secondary importance," declared J. A. Cockburn, who presided at the annual meeting of manual training teachers at Blackpool, England. "Our whole knowledge of the world comes to us through the muscles, and is remembered by them.

"The muscles' memory is the essential part of memory. Not only physical force lies there, but the mind of real man. It marks out his knowledge and defines his character. But for muscular movement people would never have had any brains worth talking about.

"Constructive genius and originality will be the requirements of the future, and the class room ought to be the adjunct of the workshop. Hitherto the cart has been put before the horse. The child instinctively recognized the importance of muscular motion, and despite its teacher exercised its powers in that direction."

Queen Alexandra's Diplomacy.

Very recently while at Buckingham Palace it came to the Queen's knowledge that one of the upper housemaids, who had been in the royal service for years, was very unhappy over a love affair.

The Queen sent for the girl and after advising and consoling her sent her to Sandringham for a change. Then the Queen summoned the lover and after a good natured homily with humorous tact sent him to Sandringham too. The couple have since returned, and there will be a wedding at Buckingham Palace soon.—From P. T. O.

DOCKYARDS IN BRITAIN.

Keyham Now Occupies First Position as Naval Stronghold.

The dockyard extension at Keyham marks a new development in the history of the western port which places it in the foremost rank of Great Britain's naval strongholds. The enlargement of the twin establishments at Devonport and Keyham, which is now officially known as the North Yard, has brought into existence two new large basins, three double docks and a single one. The work has been in hand exactly eleven years.

Devonport the Old.

The history of Devonport, which, prior to 1824, was called Plymouth, goes back to the days of hemp and canvas. Keyham was founded as an outcome of the modern steam navy. It was to the foresight of Lord Auckland that the prompt introduction of a new yard was due. This was in 1846, four years after the steam frigate Firebrand had marked a first stage in the revolution in the propulsion of warships. As at first planned, Keyham had two large basins and three docks, and it was mostly used as a repairing yard. It was also the training ground of our young engineer officers before the amalgamation scheme for the training and education of officers in 1902 swept away the different branches, and brought all the cadets together at Osborne for common training.

Keyham, the New.

By the completion of the Keyham Extension Works, as the new undertaking was first called, the old and the new are welded into one. Devonport remains the name of the yard, but Keyham is the spirit of it — the spirit of machinery and engines, of vast complicated boxes of steel and brass, in which our seaman of the future will move as familiarly as his forefathers moved among spars and ropes.

SWETTENHAM'S SUCCESSOR.

Mr. Sydney Olivier Is Highly Popular With the Jamaicans.

Mr. Sydney Olivier, who succeeds Sir J. Alexander Swettenham as Governor of Jamaica, is highly popular with the Jamaicans, and enjoys their confidence in a marked degree. From 1899 to 1904 he was Colonial Secretary in Jamaica, and during three years of that period he was acting Governor of the colony. So greatly were his services esteemed that when, following the calamitous earthquake that destroyed Kingston recently, Sir Alexander Swettenham asked for permission to retire, there was a unanimous wish on the part of the press and the people that Mr. Olivier should receive the post. In the quarter of a century during which he has been associated with the Colonial Office Mr. Olivier has filled various positions connected with the West Indian colonies, and has undertaken several important missions, one of which was as secretary to the late Field Marshal Sir Henry Norman's Royal Commission on the West Indies. In 1890-91 he was acting Colonial Secretary of British Honduras, in 1895-6 Auditor-General of the Leeward Islands, and in 1898 was sent to Washington to assist in reciprocity negotiations on behalf of the West Indian colonies. Apart from his distinguished services as a colonial statesman, Mr. Olivier is a writer of graceful verse and prose. In 1881 he published a volume of "Poems and Parodies," but his work in prose has been confined to brilliant essays and magazine articles on Socialism, economics and art. He has been from the beginning one of the leading lights of the Fabian Society, and was its secretary from 1886 to 1890. He was one of the contributors, with Mr. George Bernard Shaw and others, to the famous Fabian essays, which represent, perhaps, the greatest effort of the society in the popularization of Socialism.

Girl Masquerades as Boy.

A remarkable story of a girl who was induced by her mother to masquerade as an errand boy in order to rob her employer was told at the Liverpool, Eng., Police Court recently. Emily Barnes, an intelligent girl of fifteen, said that after conversation with her mother she dressed up as a boy some months ago, and obtained work running errands. A few weeks ago, under the name of "Harold Barnes" she found employment in the shop of Mr. Jacobus. Noticing where the money was kept she hid one night in the cellar. In the early hours of the following morning, she broke open the till with an axe and stole £4, subsequently giving the money to her mother. Suspicion, however, fell upon the supposed boy, and she was charged at the Police Court without her real sex being discovered. It was only when remanded to the workhouse that she confessed to being a girl.

New Cruiser Launched.

The British armored cruiser Invincible was launched last week from the Elswick shipyard, Newcastle.

She is one of the trio of largest cruisers in the world, of which the first, the Indomitable, was launched March, 16.

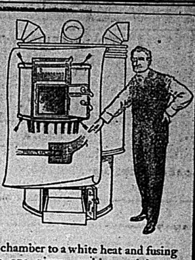
Under the admiralty order the greatest secrecy was observed, in order to prevent any details regarding the new warship leaking out.

Her dimensions are the same as those of the Indomitable, namely, she is 17,250 tons, is 530 feet long, exceeding the older armored cruisers by 50 feet; has turbine engines and is expected to attain the high speed of 25 knots an hour.

The armament of these three cruisers includes eight 12-inch guns, almost equaling the main battery of the Dreadnought.

King's Cane Collection.

King Edward is a diligent collector of walking sticks, match-boxes, caricatures, and model ships. His collection of canes numbers nearly 2,000, and most of these have remarkable associations. A stick highly prized by the King is one used by Queen Victoria in her closing years. It is made from a portion of the oak in whose boughs Charles I. concealed himself after his defeat by Cromwell at Worcester.



Fused Joints are Air-tight

Fused Joints are used only in "Hecla" Furnaces. They are made by bringing the iron and steel of the radiating chamber to a white heat and fusing the metals into one piece—making a joint so permanent and so tight, that it prevents for all time the escape of smoke, gas and dust into the house.

"Hecla" Furnace joints are just as tight, after ten years service, as when first installed.

"HECLA" FUSED JOINTS are covered by patents and are used exclusively in "Hecla" Furnaces. The cemented and bolted joints in other furnaces are soon impaired by the unequal expansion of the steel and iron. The cement drops out; the bolts work loose; soon leaving openings through which gas and dust escape. FUSED JOINTS make "Hecla" heating ample, economical, sanitary and healthful.

LARDER LAKE
Proprietary Goldfields, Limited.

Owing to the phenomenal rush for shares in the above company, the first limited amount of stock at our first offering of $1.00 per share will be exhausted sooner than expected. The price will then be materially advanced.

The advance will take place any day and probably without notices—just as soon as the stock has been introduced by placing a very limited amount at our initial price of $1.00 per share—most of which is sold.

I am not urging anyone to take on Larder Lake Proprietary. The stock is fast selling itself, and in a short time will all be placed in Canada and the United States.

I am anxious, however, that my Canadian following get what they want at the first price. Hence this Canadian advertisement to give you notice that the ground-floor opportunity will not last much longer.

My following has consistently made money by acting on my advice. Thousands will testify to that.

I have never advised the purchase of a stock without it materially advancing in market value within a reasonable time. My method after placing a stock with the public is to see that it is listed on the Exchanges. In every such case the result has been a legitimate market at an advanced price.

That is my record.

Larder Lake Proprietary will shortly be listed on the Exchanges and placed on the New York and Boston curbs.

I predict that very soon indeed it will stand at several dollars a share. I furthermore know that after the stamp mill materializes results, and it should be running within six weeks, that they will be of a sensational nature, and I know that the stock will then surely see $10 a share. A bold prediction, I hear some say, but those who shortly accept my invitation to take the trip to Larder on the special train I'm going to run from New York, Boston and Toronto will think my prediction conservative enough when they are on the ground and see what I and my engineers have been investigating and verifying for six months past.

The facts about the Larder Lake Goldfields, and the Proprietary Company in particular, are far too great to present here.

Full particulars, however, may be secured on request by calling personally, or by mail, telegraph or 'phone.

Again, I say, I am not urging the purchase of this stock, for it is selling itself even faster than we can take care of the orders from Canada and the United States—two days behind now—but I am anxious that my Canadian following get into this, by far the best thing I have ever recommended, at our first offering price.

THE CHRISTIAN OPTIMIST.

"There was a man who smiled
Because the day was bright;
Because he slept at night;
Because God gave him sight
To gaze upon his child
Because his little one
Could leap and laugh and run;
Because the distant sun
Smiled on the earth, he smiled.

"He toiled and still was glad
Because the air was free;
Because he loved, and she
That claimed his love and he Shared all the joys they had.
Because the grasses grew;
Because the sweet wind blew;
Because that he could hew
And hammer, he was glad.

"Because he lived he smiled,
And did not look ahead
With bitterness or dread,
But nightly sought his bed
As calmly as a child.
And people called him mad
For being always glad
With such things as he had,
And shook their heads and smiled."

The Ottawa Free Press says that the grain men of the West are beginning to see visions of dollar wheat because of the car shortage beyond the head of the Great Lakes. They claim a great part of the crop is still stored in the elevators and in the granaries of farmers, while in some portions of Alberta and Saskatchewan considerable wheat remains to be threshed this spring. No relief to the car famine seems to be in sight. As soon as transportation fully opens up it will be taxed to its limit to care for the crush of immigration. The wheat consequently must come upon the market in small quantities. Shrewd speculators declare that this will be equivalent to curtailing the supply, and the price is bound to rise to one dollar a bushel or higher. This is not the most cheering prospect to the householder who in addition to advanced prices in almost all articles of consumption can easily foresee the possibilities of increases in the price of bread if wheat reaches the dollar limit.

HISTORIC HOUSE GONE.

Burning of Deer Lodge, Winnipeg, Breaks Link With the Past.

Who that has been to Winnipeg has not seen Deer Lodge, the quaint old road house on the road to Portage la Prairie, near Lord Strathcona's place, called Silver Heights, where everybody goes to "see the buffalo." This old house was burned down a short time ago, and while many references were made to it, perhaps the most interesting was one in The Edmonton Bulletin, given below, compiled from the recollections of an old fur trader, who knew the house "in its first glory." The fire occurred on the same night that witnessed in Pennsylvania the burning of John Wannamaker's handsome country seat. In the latter the flames destroyed over a million dollars' worth of property, rare tapestry and paintings and antique furniture in fifty rooms. On the other hand Deer Lodge was only valued at $10,000, but with its passing went one of the few historical buildings of our young West.

Built by a Fur Magnate.

It was built in 1859 by John Rowan, son of the Chief Factor Rowan, who built the first Big House within the walls of Fort Edmonton in the early part of last century, as Chief Factor Hardisty built the second Big House outside the fort. Mr. Harrison Young, from whom this information was obtained, states that this John Rowan was for many years employed with the Hudson Bay Co. in Edmonton district. He was for several years in charge of Fort Pitt. Mr. Rowan later went down to the Red River district, and was noted as being one of the old brigade of Hudson Bay factors, who was largely instrumental in the carrying through of the negotiations which finally resulted in the amalgamation of the Hudson Bay Co. and Northwest Trading Co. These great rivals had repeatedly come to blows in their efforts to secure the fur trade of the West, and their rivalry had resulted in a practical cessation of all attempts to settle the country. Traders and settlers were involved in the dispute, which resulted in civil war, massacre and murder.

Residence of Speaker McKay.

Deer Lodge was rendered notable as being the residence of the late Hon. James McKay, who was Speaker of the Legislature under the Gerrard-Davis Administration, and afterwards a member of the Davis Government, who resided there from 1860 to 1878. Mr. McKay was the husband of Margaret Rowan. Mr. McKay made the place famous as a stock farm, and in many of the records of the time, and up to 1879, his thoroughbreds are mentioned.

The lodge was constructed of hewn logs, chinked with mortar, the outside being covered with sheeting. It was a storey and a half in height, surrounded on three sides by a piazza and upper balcony, and decorated at each peak of the roof by a set of deer horns, from which it took its name. The grounds surrounding were heavily wooded, and laid out in handsome flower beds and garden plants.

Of recent years it has been used as a hostelry, and while additions have been made to accommodate the increased business of the hotel the main structure remained unchanged.

The proprietor, Mr. Chadwick, maintained a sort of small zoo with many interesting animals, in the beautiful woodlands about the lodge, and anyone who has had the pleasure of treating the big bear to 'pop will not easily forget the incident. The ardent way in which Bruin seized the bottle from your hands and held it to his mouth—tilting it to drain the last drop—was exceedingly amusing. And big, clumsy, clever Bruin almost seemed aware of your amusement.

Frog's Long Imprisonment.

While an old horse-chestnut stump was being cut down at Lathbury, a live frog was discovered between the bark and the timber, about 15 inches from the ground. The bark was thick, and had grown completely round it, and, writes a correspondent, there was not the slightest hole through which the frog could have crept in recent years. The tree has shown no signs of life for at least five years past, and on the lowest computation the bark must have had two years' growth. The frog must, therefore, have been cut off in its prison from light and food for at least seven years. It was yellow and small, but in excellent health, and when placed on the grass hopped off.

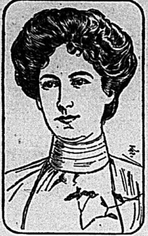
WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS MARY E. M'LEAN.

Sees Brahman Glories as Companion of Gaikwar of Baroda.

Miss Mary E. McLean, a native of Lawrenceville, Pa., is filling the unique position of tutor and companion to her highness the Maharani Gaikwar of Baroda, India, wife of the maharajah, who visited the United States not long ago. These dignitaries were greatly impressed by their visit and during the trip decided to engage for two years an American college woman, one well fitted to relieve her highness of social duties when occasion required, as well as to assist her in entertaining. Miss McLean writes home that the maharani is a very beautiful and intelligent woman. The maharajah is a graduate of Oxford and possessed of vast wealth. To her great disappointment, everything about the palace, even to the rugs and furnishings, is imported from England. She has had the greatest difficulty in making the people who are fitting up her bungalow understand that she wants everything Indian, not English.



MISS MARY E. M'LEAN.

Her highness is a Brahman of the highest caste, dresses in native costume and wears its accompanying veil of fifteen or twenty yards length.

Miss McLean has been permitted to view the wondrous jewels, which are the talk of the world—great collars, necklaces, bracelets and anklets of enormous sized gems, largely diamonds of the rarest purity. Her highness is said to have the finest collection of pearls in India. Three rooms of the palace, under heavy guard, are used in which to store these jewels of fabulous wealth.

The Silent Girl's Attractions.

There are a few negative virtues which conduce more to the comfort of the possessor and those associated with him or her than a talent for holding one's tongue. To know when to speak and equally when to be silent is no small part of the necessary equipment for life. Many a man passes for wise simply by means of saying nothing and looking intelligent when others speak, while those who talk least make fewest enemies.

A woman especially to be attractive must preserve a sense of reserve. She must, so to speak, keep up a certain amount of mystery about herself. To many persons this reserve is in itself a compelling charm. In a popular modern novel the imaginative hero wearies of his bride because he discovers that she is "too transparent, too easily understood," which, however unreasonable, is not an impossible state of affairs.

All savage nations place high value upon silence, and conversation is undoubtedly one of the arts of civilization. To know what to say and how to say it, when and where—this is the sixth sense, the unfailing tact which shall steer its possessor over hidden shoals and through breakers with unerring safety and win for him or her the harbor of popularity, of general good will. Fluency and garrulity—these are as different, as distinct, as the flowers which we cultivate with care and the weeds which we ceaselessly struggle to banish from our borders. Pity that any should be so misled as to mistake the one for the other!

Undoubtedly a great part of the mischief which has cursed the world since the beginning has been done by too much talking. "Where no fuel is the fire goeth out; where no talebearer is the strife ceaseth." Had our first mother not paused to parley with the serpent paradise had never been lost and thenceforth all through history idle words have been among the agencies which have turned the fate of nations.

A Photograph Fad.

Elevators have gone out of style. Society's latest fancy is for being seen upon the stairs. The society woman, brave in her best picture gown, stands upon the steps, just high enough to place her in the center of the picture. Her gown spreads around her or else sweeps off in becoming lines—only this and nothing more—but it requires a deal of study to carry off the gown properly.

Society women are photographed in so many different poses that it is difficult to find anything new. But the staid pictures of the winter are entirely novel in that they make a picture in themselves. They are artistic and very graceful, and they possess certain points that are novel in the photographic line.

The society woman who is going to be photographed in this manner makes a study of certain things in advance.

She learns how to sway her figure.

She learns to bend well forward and well backward without losing her balance.

She learns how to walk with a staff, for staff pictures are the vogue.

She acquires the art of turning around while going upstairs without tripping.

She learns to manage a very long gown upon the staircase.

And she learns to smile as she climbs.

The essential for stair climbing a la mode is a very long and very handsome gown. The dress must lie upon the floor for at least three inches in front. In the back it should positively sweep the floor without being strictly a train. It should have that round, beautiful sweeping appearance peculiar to the gowns of actresses when they go upstairs.

The Baby Food Specialist.

A woman on a car was telling another of the trouble she had to get any kind of food that would agree with the baby, says the New York Sun. "Why don't you send for a specialist?" asked the other. "Never heard of such a thing." "Well, she will come to your house every day and try all sorts of ways of mixing and various proportions of milk and cream and will give them at different temperatures and intervals. And she will stay there for two or three hours and watch the effects on the baby, and when she gets it just right she will show you how to do it yourself. It's wonderful what a little difference in the mixing makes, and these specialists can see effects that you or I would never know the cause of."

"How lovely!" exclaimed the other, and then she added, "And her charges?"

"Oh, nothing at all. The people who make the foods send her at their expense."

Filet Darning.

Filet darning is the favorite work for woman's leisure hours at the present moment. If a knowledge of a netting is possessed, the foundation fabric is made by the worker, but if not the square meshed is bought at the lace counters and is then darned in historic patterns to imitate antique lace. The articles oftenest made are doilies and centerpieces, but pillow covers and table and bureau scarfs offer themselves for adornment with the filet squares, and even bedspreads and curtains are sometimes attempted by the ambitious workers. When eyelet work and the padded French embroidery are used in conjunction with the filet lace, the result is very decorative. The foundation net must be stretched over a frame to be darned to best effect. Some lingerie blouses show insets of the filet lace with good effect.

Winding the Bobbin.

If your machine is one of the newer makes and has a winder with the little automatic catch, you can save yourself a good deal of trouble by winding a fresh bobbin while the sewing is going on. To do this put a second spool upon the spool holder and attach an end to the fresh bobbin. Slip the catch in place, and while the long seams glide smoothly from under the presser, emptying the bobbin in use, the second spool is turning merrily and filling a new one. What a comfort it is to find a bobbin already filled every machine sewer knows. And she knows equally how she hates to stop to wind one right in the middle of a long seam.

Sand Boxes.

A big box of sand is a source of great joy to small children when a slight ailment or bad weather confines them to the house all day, and this is not impossible to manage in a workmanlike nursery if a large dust sheet is spread on the floor when the operations commence. The box should be on wheels, as sand is very heavy, and it should be rolled away out of sight when not in use, says Woman's Life. Tiny spades and pails, also some pebbles and shells, are required to make this famous "play" complete, and should any sand be spilled on the unprotected parts of the room it is easily swept up.

To Brighten Leather.

To brighten faded leather first wash the leather with a soft sponge squeezed nearly dry from soapsuds and remove as much moisture as possible by rubbing with a flannel cloth. Set the piece of furniture in the sun, so it will dry thoroughly and quickly. When the leather is entirely dry, rub it briskly with a soft flannel cloth wet with kerosene. The more thoroughly the oil is rubbed in the better the leather will look. The furniture should be left in the open air until the odor of the kerosene has entirely disappeared.

To bring back mayonnaise when it curdles is as follows: Take a lump of ice as big as your fist and rub it quickly through the mayonnaise for a couple of minutes. Then take out and stir very briskly. The evil will have been remedied without the bother of using a fresh plate and egg yolk. Be sure to have a large lump of ice. Small pieces will do no good, as they do not chill the mixture quickly enough.

All hooks used in bathroom, kitchen or pantry should be dipped in enamel paint and thoroughly dried before being screwed in. Then there will be no rust spots on towels or cloths that are hung on them when damp.

A white glove should never be worn more than once without cleaning. If it is cleaned properly after each wearing, it can be worn indefinitely, as the spots do not become set.

PHONE ETIQUETTE.

The Undignified "Hello" Seems to Have Come to Stay.

"How do you ever stop a conversation with a girl over the telephone?" asked a worried young man the other day. "Grace X. called me up last evening to tell me that she had heard from somebody I was interested in, and then we talked along in a desultory way, while I was wondering how I was ever going to get into my dress suit and call for Ethel in time for the opera, and Ethel dotes on the overture. I didn't think it was my place to say 'goodby,' and Grace evidently had nothing pressing on hand and felt sociable, and there I was. At last she seemed to reflect that I might have something to do besides gossip with her and she rang off, but I was fifteen minutes late at Ethel's. The matter was not made better with her when I explained that I had been detained by Grace at the telephone."

It is the place of the young lady to stop the conversation. The younger should always wait for the elder of two men or two women to end it.

And beware how you call the name of your unseen friend until you are sure. The other day a young man responded to a ring and, after a moment's talk, exclaimed, "How good in you, Emma, to call me up!" Coldly came the rejoinder, "This is not Emma; it is Gertrude." Strained relations marked the rest of the interview.

The undignified "Hello" seems to have come to stay. Nothing better has been proposed in place of it, but when we can substitute "Good morning" or "Good evening" let us do so.

WEDDING ETIQUETTE.

Hints For Church and Quiet Home Ceremonies.

When a bride is married in a traveling dress, the number of bridesmaids should be limited to one.

If the bride goes away on her wedding journey right from the church, friends do not expect to be invited to the reception.

Only the nearest relatives and a few intimate friends receive invitations to the reception if it is to be a small one.

The bridal bouquet may be dispensed with and a prayer book carried or not, as desired.

There is no rule against either bride or bridesmaid carrying a bouquet. Whether she does or not is merely a matter of personal inclination on her part.

The custom of proposing healths at the wedding breakfast or tea has almost died out. In any case only those of the bride, bridegroom and bridesmaids are proposed.

The bride provides her trousseau and her presents to the bridegroom. These are her only expenses.

Her father pays for flowers to decorate the church, if any are used. He also pays the choir if the service is a musical one and provides the carpet and awning that are used on the pathway to the church door and carriages.

The bridegroom buys the bride's flowers and pays for the carriage in which he takes his wife away. He also pays the minister's fee and usually gives a small gift to his best man and each usher.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES.

Never fill a lamp quite full, or when it is brought into a warm room the expansion of the oil will cause it to overflow, and the result will be decidedly unpleasant.

Soda used in the laundry should be dissolved before the garments to be washed are placed in the tub. Yellow stains, which soon form holes, are caused by soda touching wet linen.

Saucepans should be kept clean on the outside as well as inside. To prevent the smoke from sticking rub the outside of a new saucepan with fat before placing it on the stove. Wash with hot water and soda.

If possible leave a wet umbrella open to dry so that the silk will not rot or crease. If it cannot be left open, turn it upside down, so that the moisture will not collect at the ferrule end and so rot the silk while evaporating.

The colored frock or blouse that has become faded with frequent launderings or from wear in the sun may be bleached to a clear white by boiling in cream of tartar water. The correct quantity to be used to make the garment a pure white is a teaspoonful of the powder to a quart of water.

Perfumed Pillows.

Since those extra little pillows have become so frequently met with as a part of bed furnishings pine and lavender pillows have both become more popular.

Both of them when made for a bed are incased in strong muslin covers, over which the pretty little white slip is drawn.

For couches, of course, darker and more serviceable materials are used, often for pine pillows a deep yellow, embroidered, in a simple outline stitch, in brown or deep bronze greens. For lavender a light lavender, embroidered in a darker shade, or one of the pretty white cretonnes, covered with blossoms and stripes of lavender, makes an attractive covering, says Woman's Life.

If you are going away and can squeeze just one more thing into your trunk, tuck one of the regular baby pillows in. The pillows where you are staying may be stuffy and hard, and that little pillow is just the thing for a hammock or for the nap that you take in the old orchard stretched out upon rug or steamer blanket, or it may add much to the peace of your nightly slumbers.

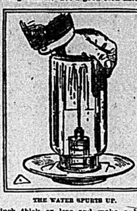
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

HOMEMADE FOUNTAIN.

An Amusing Experiment With a Jar and Bottle of Water.

Of course you all like fountains. Aren't they attractive and cool on a hot summer's day, though? Next summer, of course, you will see them in the parks. But in the meanwhile you can easily make one of your own, if you wish. Follow these directions:

Take a perfumery bottle or something similar. Get a good cork half an inch thick or less and make a hole through it. Put a straw through the hole, so that one end nearly touches the bottom of the bottle and the other is just above the top of the cork.



THE WATER SPURTS UP.

Place a piece of blotting paper on a plate. Fill the bottle with water and stand it upon the blotting paper. Now get a big glass jar, warm it and quickly turn it upside down over your small bottle, pressing it down upon the blotting paper with your hand.

In a few moments you will see a tiny stream of water shoot up from the bottle, right up to the top of the jar, and this will continue until the bottle is almost empty.

Try it.

THE NAVEL ORANGE.

Probable Origin of This Delicious Seedless Fruit.

Boys and girls are all fond of oranges, of course, and especially of those that have no seeds, for this particular kind is usually larger, juicier and of a finer flavor than others, says the Chicago News. They may not know how this orange happens to be seedless.

The seedless orange is also called the "navel" orange—not "naval," as some persons believe—for the reason that it usually has a little protuberance on the blossom end, the end opposite to the stem. In other words, it has a navel. How the species originated is not definitely known, but it was probably an accident. Nature tried to produce twin oranges perhaps, but one of the twins survived merely as a sort of kernel imbedded in the skin.

It is strange that a distinct species should spring from such an accident, but nature does stranger things than that. This orange with the little protuberance was noticed, of course, and examination showed that the seeds had not been developed. It was quite evident that the formation of the protuberance, or "navel," as it soon came to be called, had prevented the formation of the seeds by using up the nutriment that the seeds would save required. Cultivators at once caught the idea and gave their special attention to the production of the seedless fruit.

It is believed that the navel orange originated in Brazil, and it was from that country that our agricultural department imported some of the trees several years ago and budded them on trees at Riverside, Cal. The experiment was in every way successful.

Trick With a Cent.

Open the hand naturally and place the cent on the palm and then ask some one to brush it out with a whisk broom. After repeated efforts it probably will be suspected that the cent is fastened in your hand in some way. In order to prove that it is not let the sweeper place it on his own palm, and he will find it remains as immovable there as before. A few persons have flat palms. The cent may easily be swept off such palms, but they are not common.

Conundrums.

When are soldiers stronger than elephants? When they carry a fortress.

Why is a trolley car safe in a thunderstorm? Because it has a conductor.

Why have you a right to pick an artist's pockets? Because he has pictures (picked yours).

Why should 288 never be mentioned by polite boys and girls? Because it is too (two) gross.

Talks With Nature.

"I think you're quite funny," I said
To the river, "for, while you've a bed,
You're awake night and day
And run on, yet you stay,
And your mouth is so far from your head."

I said to the hill, "I'll allow
You have a most wonderful brow,
But you've such a big foot
That you never can put
On a shoe of the style they use now."

I said to the tree: "You are queer.
Your trunk is all packed, but I fear
You can't leave until spring.
When—a curious thing—
You must still remain standing right here."

To a green red blackberry I said,
"I know you are green when you're red,
And you're red when you're green,
But to say what I mean
Is enough to befuddle one's head."

SUNSHINE FURNACE

The Sunshine is differently and better constructed than common furnaces. It's stronger, safer, more healthful

The dome, the two sections of the fire-pot and the frame of the ash-pit are all securely fastened together by our famous "cup joint." Three "cup joints" in all, you see. All sections, you will notice, fit together perfectly, and are lined with a layer of asbestos cement, which unites them so firmly together that they become, in every purpose, one solid piece of metal. Can never spring or fall apart.

And that's not all! The top of the dome is fastened to the sides with cement and boiler rivets, making the Sunshine just as smoke, gas, heat and dust tight as a steam boiler. From a hygienic standpoint it takes precedence in the furnace world.

Notice, too, the Sunshine is equipped with an automatic gas damper. This damper automatically opens when the gas in the furnace reaches a certain pressure and allows it to escape up the chimney. Eliminates all danger of an explosion or gas escaping through the registers

Queen Aids Destitute Dancer.

A delightful story of Queen Alexandra's self-sacrifice in the cause of kindness and mercy is told in connection with her Majesty's recent stay in Paris.

It seems that a letter was sent to her Majesty, calling attention to the case of Loie Fuller, the famous dancer, who had fallen on evil times owing to illness. The dancer was to make a reappearance at the Hippodrome, and it was suggested that the royal patronage would help her greatly.

Every moment of the Queen's time was already filled by prearranged engagements, but her Majesty cancelled several engagements and went to the Hippodrome.

Married Upon Return.

An amusing story of how young Irish farmers obtain American wives was related at the last sitting of the Royal Commission on Congestion in Ireland.

Mr. John Fitzgibbon, a Nationalist leader, of Castlerea, said that as an experiment he bought a grazing tract of nearly 300 acres and settled nine young farmers upon it

"These men are all unmarried, except one," continued Mr. Fitzgibbon, "but they will probably get wives with from £150 to £200, girls who have gone to America and returned to Ireland with a little money.

"The marrying season is from January 1st, until Lent," he added.

Canadians' Adventures.

Two wealthy Northwest Canadians who went to England in December holidaying, were robbed at London in January of £215. By pawning clothes they settled their hotel bills, and walked to Cardiff, where they expected money from Canada. It did not arrive, so they got work on a tramp steamer for a voyage to the Mediterranean. On their return, destitute, they were kept several weeks by a man in humble circumstances until the arrival of long-delayed funds, and have just sailed for Canada.

RARE BOGUS GEMS.

Small Rubies and Sapphires Enlarged to Any Size.

The discovery of a Parisian manufacturer who is making rubies and sapphires of large size by an ingenious process is likely to cause trouble among English, as it has done already among French, jewelers and dealers in precious stones.

A London gentleman, who has learned the secret of the process from the manufacturer himself, said that these rubies and sapphires are made by taking the remnants of cut stones, and also small and badly shaped stones, which by themselves are of little value, and making them up by means of the electrical furnace and high-pressure moulds to any size required.

"I have seen rubies and sapphires thus manufactured ranging in size up to half an inch," he said. "These stones are called 'constructed' rubies and 'constructed' sapphires, and they possess all the quality of the original stone. Indeed, the only way to detect the difference between the 'constructed' and original stone is to look at the grain, or 'silk,' as jewelers call it, through a powerful microscope.

"The 'silk' is straight in the original stone, and curly or cloudy in the 'constructed' one. A firm of London pawnbrokers advanced more than $2,000 a month ago on a 'constructed' ruby. Of course, it was not worth anything like $500; but that was the market price of an original stone of the same size. The ratio of value between the 'constructed' and original stone is about two-fifths.

"You can see, however, that one is perfectly safe in wearing these stones. I am told that the ruby trade in England is already suffering in anticipation, for jewelers, who are fully aware of the existence of these 'constructed' stones, also know that large quantities of them will soon appear in the English markets."

British Domestic Evils.

Divorces are, happily, rare in society circles. Separation by mutual consent, however, grows more frequent every year. Everyone has upon his or her visiting list husbands and wives who never meet if they can help it, but between whom there has never been an open breach. Incompatibility of temper is the usual cause, and the reason for that is one imagines, the still common custom of encouraging the younger generation to marry before they have begun to approach years of discretion.—London Throne.

THE DAIRY.

The Use of Starters in Butter-Making.

Even before bacteriologists had studied this subject, buttermakers had learned that under some circumstances it was advantageous to add to their cream what they called a starter, says Prof. Conn in the Country Gentleman. The starter was simply some already ripened cream or sour milk, and was added to the cream chiefly in winter, when the ripening takes place more slowly than in summer. Its purpose was not to control the ripening, but to hasten it. The addition of a starter simply planted in the cream a large number of bacteria, although this, of course, was not understood by the buttermaker. Finally it was found to be possible to determine experimentally the kind of bacteria that produce the desired type of ripening and the proper-flavored butter, and then by proper cultivation to obtain these organisms in large quantities and put them directly into the cream to be ripened, thus insuring the presence of large numbers of the desired organisms. This suggestion was quickly followed out, and as a result various commercial cultures, or butter starters as they are called, are cultures of bacteria, usually of one particular kind though sometimes of two or more different kinds, which have been developed in bacteriological laboratories, and have been found by experience to produce the desired type of cream-ripening. They are sold to the buttermakers where wanted, and when used under proper conditions and in the proper way, enable the buttermaker more thoroughly to control the cream-ripening than he has ever been able to do before.

The use of such cultures has been extending constantly in the last ten years, and they are employed far more generally to-day than ever before. In the meantime, the buttermakers themselves have learned of a method of procuring starters without recourse to the cultures purchased in market. These starters have been generally known as home starters, and consist of a lot of sour milk or cream procured under the most favorable conditions. The buttermaker will set aside a can of the best dairy within his reach, and allow it to sour naturally. The sour milk under these circumstances, will usually contain a great quantity of bacteria, favorable to cream-ripening and when used as a starter in his cream will, in most cases, give the desired results. There has been more or less of rivalry between the two methods of controlling the cream-ripening. The use of the commercial cultures and the use of the home starters each has advantages, and each has disadvantages. It cannot be stated to-day that either one or the other is emphatically superior. The use of the home-starters is far more common among dairymen than the use of the commercial cultures, doubtless in a considerable degree because of the expense of buying the bacteria and the ease of making home starters. The use of the commercial cultures, however, has been increasing and is still increasing. It is impossible to say at present what is to be the future development along these lines. The use of some so well known among the better creameries that it is fairly certain that the future development of buttermaking is to see the almost universal adoption of the control of cream-ripening by the use of starters, either those naturally made by the buttermaker or those that come from the commercial cultures which the bacteriologists place on the market.

In the use of these starters there have also been differences in method. When first experimented with, it was thought necessary to pasteurize the cream before the addition of the starter. The logical demand of this is evident. If the cream that reaches the creamery is already filled with bacteria of various kinds in large numbers, it would seem to be necessary to get rid of them before it will be possible to get the desired result from a starter which might be added: hence the pasteurizing of the cream up to a temperature of about 160 degrees was recommended, to be followed by the addition of the starter for bringing about the cream-ripening. Practical experiments of the bacteriologists and buttermakers of the United States soon showed, however, that favorable results could be obtained by adding the starter directly to the cream without pasteurizing. The reasons for this are simply that the starter adds to the cream great quantities of bacteria sufficient to overcome the presence of smaller numbers of germs which might have been in the cream originally, so that in spite of their presence the cream ripening is brought about, primarily, by the bacteria in the starter. This is not logical and not sure, because it will sometimes happen that the cream is already so well stocked with mischievous bacteria that the starter cannot overcome them. But the practical results have been fairly satisfactory, and it has been found that the use of starters in this way has in the great majority of cases improved the quality of the butter as desired. In this country, this method of using starters has been common. In certain parts of Europe, the pasteurization of cream as a primary measure is practically widely adopted.

There has been something of a rivalry between these two methods as such, and considerable dispute whether the use of cream-ripening with or without pasteurization is the better. There has been, as yet, no settlement of the question. There are some reasons for believing that a somewhat better product is obtained from unpasteurized cream than from pasteurized cream; but, on the other hand, it is certain that greater uniformity may be obtained from pasteurization. In this country, pasteurization has not been adopted, except in rare instances, largely because of the expense and trouble.

Briefly, then, the buttermaker has found himself to be quite dependent upon the activities of bacteria. Whenever he is ripening his cream, he is making use of them, whether he knows it or not. It is also certain that the future development of the dairy industry will see a more widely extended application of bacterial methods for controlling the phenomenon of cream-ripening, and thus producing a more uniform product. As a result of the extension of the use of the starters, commercial or natural, there has been, in the last fifteen years, a general improvement in the quality of the butter itself. This does not mean that the best butter made to-day is superior to the best butter made in earlier years, but only that the general average has been raised, and that with the use of starters there is a smaller proportion of poor butter than was formerly the case when starters were not used.

POULTRY DEPARTMENT.

Brooder Chicks.

Probably no one feature of a bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture is so popular at this season of the year, when thousands of people have the "chicken fever," than that devoted to "Poultry Suggestions for the Amateur," in Farmers' Bulletin No. 237.

Many people prefer to hatch their chicks in an incubator, and then also want a brooder for raising them. Something cheap, yet good, is their cry. It is not always wise, however to use the "cheapest." The bulletin, however, gives a plan devised by the Connecticut (Storrs) Experiment Station of a brooder made out of an old packing case, which will accommodate fifty chicks, at a cost of about a dollar. This brooder has given excellent results, but must be used in a shed or colony house. The brooder proper is made of four ten-inch boards, three feet long, on which is nailed a tin or galvanized iron cover. Above this, around the sides, are strips one inch thick, and on these strips sits the floor of the brooder. There should be a couple of one-inch holes in each strip for the admission of air. The floor should be made of matched lumber. In the centre an eight-inch hole should be cut, and over this an old tin pan, about ten inches across the top (which is now to become the bottom) and four inches deep, should be placed. The sides of this tin should be punched full of holes. For a hover a table two feet six inches square, with legs about 4 1-2 inches long, may be used. Cheap felt may be tacked on for a curtain, care being taken that it is cut from top to bottom every five or six inches. For an outside wall, four four-inch strips, three feet long, nailed together and set on the brooder, will be satisfactory. When the chicks are ten days old, one side may be taken away and a bridge used so that they may run under the hover direct to the floor of the room.

The Connecticut Station went so far as to make the lamp, too. The burner, of course, had to be purchased, but only at a cost of about twenty cents, while the bowl was made of a two-quart tin basin, covered with a small pie plate turned bottom side up. This plate had a hole punched in it and the burner was soldered to the plate. The plate also was fastened to the basin in the same way.

In order to have good, early maturing pullets it is necessary that they get a good start. The first few weeks' care is responsible to a great extent for their success or failure 8 months later. Feed, regularity of feeding, cleanliness and plenty of grit and water are all important matters. Chicks should be carefully protected from storms and sudden changes of weather, since these, together with the low vitality of the parent, are responsible for more deaths than is improper food. Poultrymen differ considerably as to when the chick shall have its first food. Good results have been secured when chicks have been permitted to pick a little sand or fine grit from a clean board when about thirty-six hours old, and when about forty-eight hours old, to eat breadcrumbs moistened in milk and squeezed dry. After that almost any of the prepared chick foods may be fed about five times a day till the chicks are two or three weeks old, when they will do well on wheat screenings, and need not be fed oftener than three times a day. It is advisable to let the chicks have access to green feed at all times. Fine clover hay, cut with an ordinary straw cutter, is excellent, and also makes a good litter to scatter the feed in. It is best, however, to give the last food at night on a clean board, letting the chicks eat all they will and then removing the board. At other times care should be taken that they be kept hungry, or at least sufficiently so to be eager to eat when fresh food is offered them.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

The Last of the Apples.

German Apple Cake. — Scald one cupful of milk and add one-third cupful of butter, one-third cupful of sugar, and one-half teaspoonful of salt. When luke-warm, add one yeast cake broken in pieces, and as soon as yeast cake is dissolved, add two unbeaten eggs and enough flour to make a soft dough. Beat thoroughly, cover, and let rise until the mixture doubles its bulk. Again beat thoroughly, cover and let rise. Turn into a buttered dripping pan, spread evenly, having mixture about half an inch deep. Brush entire surface generously with melted butter. Pare, cut in eighths and remove cores from five sour apples. Press sharp edges of apples into the dough, arranging in parallel rows lengthwise of the pan. Sprinkle with one-half teaspoonful of sugar mixed with one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon. Cover, and let rise, then bake in a moderate oven thirty minutes. Cut in squares, and serve hot or cold with whipped cream sweetened and flavored with vanilla.

Apple Fritters.—Mix and sift one and one-third cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Add gradually, while stirring constantly, two-thirds cupful of milk; then add one egg well beaten. Wipe, pare, core and cut two medium-sized sour apples in eighths, then cut eighths in slices. Stir prepared apples into batter, and drop by spoonfuls into deep fat. Fry until delicately browned, drain on brown paper, and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Serve hot on a plate covered with a folded napkin.

Apple Souffle.—Wipe, pare, quarter and core four sour apples, steam until soft, and rub through a sieve; there should be three-fourths cupful of apple pulp. Sweeten the pulp to taste with powdered sugar, and add a few grains of salt. Beat the whites of three eggs until stiff and add gradually, while beating constantly, the fruit pulp. A wire whisk is the best utensil for making this dish. Pile slightly on serving dish, chill and serve with Custard Sauce. — Beat three egg yolks slightly, add one-fourth cupful of sugar and one-eighth teaspoonful of salt; stir constantly, while adding gradually two cupfuls of scalded milk. Cook in double boiler, stirring constantly until mixture thickens and coating is formed on the spoon. Strain immediately, chill and flavor.

Imperial Apples. — Make a syrup by boiling one and one-half cupfuls of sugar and one and one-half cupfuls of water eight minutes. Wipe, core and pare eight apples. Cook apples in syrup until soft, occasionally skimming syrup during the cooking. Apples cook better covered with the syrup; therefore it is better to use a deep saucepan and have two cookings. Drain apples from syrup, cool, arrange on serving dish, fill cavities with jelly, marmalade or preserved fruit, and stick apples with almonds blanched and split in halves lengthwise. Garnish with whipped cream sweetened and flavored with vanilla.

Apple and Celery Salad.—Wipe selected red or green apples of uniform size, cut a thick slice from stem end of each, and scoop out inside pulp, leaving just enough adhering to the skin to keep the apples in shape. Cut apples in small pieces and mix with an equal quantity of celery, washed, scraped and cut in small pieces; then moisten with mayonnaise dressing. Refill apple shells with salad, replace tops and arrange on a bed of lettuce leaves.—Modern Priscilla.

AGRICULTURAL.

Plowing and Sowing.

This heading is not meant as a prose version of the well-kno line, "We plow the fields and sc ter." It relates to the controv as to whether we may plow a sow at once, or await the conditi known as a stale furrow, which have heard dubbed a "fetish." Wh practical men differ, like the d ters, and after such triumpha upholding of the virtues of a st furrow, especially for clover a wheat, I have been rather disc certed to find a practical farm telling me that he can grow bett wheat, after clover, plowed and so on the same day, than on a st furrow.

After a great number of write have insisted upon the importa of a stale furrow for corn aft clover, I am quietly told by a pra tical man, not in words, but a matter of his experience, that th management is a fetish. This, o course, is instructive, as it show that, no matter how contrary to th experience of others, a view will a ways find support from some qu ter. This matter has been oft explained theoretically, and enforc by practical opinion, but, in spite o this, up comes an advocate wh gives away the show by a mos damaging admission. I suppose th champions of stale furrows must h content to take a back seat, bu before doing so, I may be permitte to express some surprise and differ ence of opinion. I, with a grea many more, have always innocentl thought that heavy soils were mos in need of the mellowing influence of weather, while it is this very so which is advocated as being used t the best advantage by plowing an sowing, and that light soils shoul not be treated in this way. Bu to my views, light soils break mor easily under the harrow than th clay soils, and may be rolled dow light after plowing, and then harrowed to a fine surface and drilled. There is, therefore, but little comfort to the advocates of a stale furrow in the above admission. There is also the dying and decomposing of the clover root, which is here thrown aside as an unconsidered trifle. Though a firm believer in the importance of a stale furrow for wheat after clover, I can allow that there are always exceptions to a rule, however good. At the same time, we must not ignore the soundness of old practice in insisting upon the practice of breaking up clover sods early. I well remember a known authority giving the urgent advice to plow up clover land for wheat, if possible, before harvest, and I have seen land which had been left unplowed till late bearing very poor plants of wheat, while the remaining portions, which had been plowed early, were carrying strong plants — clearly showing the importance of a stale furrow. This was on light land. Rules in farming must always be applied with careful consideration for circumstances, or they become tyrannical.

Deviations from approved practice are often necessary on account of peculiarities of season, questions of expense, or the necessities of live stock, but rules are worth remembering after all, and this particular rule of a stale furrow for wheat after clover is one of the best. There are cases in which a fresh furrow is better than a stale one. On loose land, where turnip seed has failed, it is better to plow and drill on a moist, fresh surface.

ANOTHER NEW INSTRUMENT.

We have added to our optical parlor "the DeZeng's Luminous Retinoscope and Opthalmoscope." We have used the old forms of these instruments with the light from an outside source, which is difficult to get right position, as well as sometimes poor illumination. This instrument has the light in itself (electric dry cell) and gives a beautiful and clear view of the retina with the optic nerve and blood vessels, etc., of the eye, also a clear shadow for the "Shadow Test," and one can have the light instantly in any position desirable. Mr. Davis, the Mining Man, Still Missing

Nothing has yet been heard of Mr. E. B. Davis, the missing mining man whose disappearance in North Hastings was noted in The Intelligencer on Saturday last. Mr. Cockram, of Madoc, was in the city yesterday, and says that, so far, he has heard nothing of Mr. Davis. It is feared now that, when the missing man was in the Richardson mine he may have been drowned in the shaft. He has now been missing for over two months—since February 23th.

It is said by those who knew him that Davis was one of the best known mining men of Canada, and when he arrived in North Hastings last fall said he intended to make good what he had lost during the gold excitement in this county 35 years ago. He came in from the north in January last with rich samples of gold quartz, but was reticent as to where the discovery was made, and at present no one knows where he discovered them. He was a practical mining engineer, and a graduate of Canadian, United States and French mining schools. During his recent visit he was continually talking of the great future of mining in this county, and his sudden disappearance is very mystifying. He is a bachelor and often spoke of having a sister, but no one knows where she is.

Harry Lake Was Right On the Job.

Yesterday afternoon a horse attached to a phaeton was standing in front of a store on Front street, when it became frightened at an approaching automobile and started down street at a good gait. At the corner of Bridge and Front streets it turned and went westwards towards the lower bridge. Mr. Harry Lake, who was near by at the time, endeavored to catch the animal, but failing to do so caught hold of the conveyance, and climbing over the back, succeeded in regaining the lines and brought the horse to a standstill upon the bridge. Harry's action was favorably commented upon by those who witnessed it and he certainly performed a meritorious action. A broken trace was the only damage sustained.

A New Service Which Would Be Appreciated

Peterboro Review: The new time table of the G.T.R. will be out on the 1st of May, and it is rumored that the ten o'clock flyer will be run through to Belleville in the future. Heretofore this train did not go any farther than this city. The parlor car, which is attached to it now, would be replaced here by a pullman. This new service would be much appreciated by a large number of people.

The Police Force.

The Police Commissioners met yesterday afternoon for the purpose of considering the applications received for the position of police officer, two of whom it is necessary to appoint, owing to the resignation of Officers Snider and Hawkins. There were nine applications considered, but three were soon disposed of, as the parties applying were from 45 to 55 years of age. Two others were parties who hailed from the United States, and they have not put in an appearance. Of the four remaining it was decided that they should be notified to appear before Chief Newton for examination.

An adjourned meeting of the Commissioners, to make the appointments, will be held this afternoon.

Stormy May, Says Hicks

The weather prognostications for May as outlined by Rev. Irl R. Hicks, predict the probability of "many and heavy storms." This, he says, applies to all sections of the country. We are promised rain, wind and thunderstorms from the 1st to the 3rd. From that date till the 6th there is to be unseasonable cold in extreme northern sections, with possible sleet and snow, sending a cool wave over most parts of the country. Along about the 9th we are told to expect high temperature and thunderstorms. Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, the 12th, 13th, and 14th, are named as dates of severe storm probabilities, with warm, humid atmosphere, low barometer and southerly winds. About the 20th a probable cycle of rain, wind and thunder storms may make things uninteresting. The outlook for Victoria Day, May 24th, is not very encouraging for Canadians, presaging "Probable danger" and destructive hail storms, with sudden revulsion from extreme warmth to unseasonable cold.

Evangelists Move On.

Havelock, April 28.—The two evangelists who for the past month have been holding revival services in different churches in this vicinity have left for parts unknown. Their sermons as well as their habits have had a decided effect on the people. They worked most of the time they were in this neighborhood, and, as the farmers would not accept anything for their keep, they sent all the money they did not need away to foreign missions. They believe that a person should not keep more money than they need and store it away in the bank, but should send all unneedful money away to poor people and missions, and rely on God for their support if they should ever become disabled.

Bogus Cheque Man Worked In This City

THIS MAY BE THE FELLOW WHO "DID UP" SEVERAL OF OUR MERCHANTS A COUPLE OF YEARS AGO.

Montreal, April 29. — John M. Nelson, who claims to be a broker at Quebec, and who has been stopping at the Queen's Hotel, was arraigned to-day in Magistrate Lafontaine's court to answer a charge of passing two forged cheques. Nelson entered a plea of not guilty, and was remanded until next Friday for enquete. Detectives Cowan and Samson, who made the arrest, claim that the accused cashed two cheques, one of $25 for his hotel bill, and the other for $60. The cheques were on the Hochelaga bank and signed Albert Valiquette, which it is claimed is not the name of any one known, and certainly not that of any one having an account in that bank.

When the accused was searched at the headquarters, letters were found on him which it is alleged show that for the past two years he had been successful in this kind of game at New York, and at Belleville, Ont. Chief Carpenter stated that Nelson might be wanted in the West, but until now had received no information from there to that effect.

Harry Is Having Time Of His Life.

Few in this city but know Harry Lindley, the veteran actor who has perhaps, "executed" more plays than any other man who wore the sock and buskin in Canada. The writer's first acquaintance with Harry began in 1870, when he played "The Green Bushes" in the old building on Pinnacle St., formerly a church—now a cheese warehouse. Since then the veteran has had many ups and downs. He is at present in North Carolina, and writes interestingly to the Hamilton Times of conditions in that state. The last paragraph of Mr. Lindley's letter shows that he is having the time of his life among the people of the South, who esteem him most likely, because he fought on their side in the war of the rebellion. Harry says:

"The Daughters of the Confederacy have welcomed me with bouquets, the Lieutenant-Governor and his admirable wife have patronized me. I have sat in the Masonic chair occupied by Grand Master George Washington and to-night I sleep in the bedroom (Hertford) occupied by the Father of his Country. If this is not calculated to give me a caput inflatus nothing on earth is, but as Uncle Tom feelingly remarks, or, rather, George Harris, I am pining for the free air of Canada, with no disparagement to the state where I have spent so many happy days. I am coming north, so hope to see my friends in Hamilton. Yours, as ever."

At Sign of the Scales.

THEFT.

Two young men named John Clarige and John C. Wilson, strangers, who claimed Hamilton as their home, were arrested on a charge of theft. It appears that last evening they visited Mrs John Hinchey's store at the corner of Dundas and Pinnacle streets and bought a couple of articles and stole a quart can of maple syrup. They pleaded guilty to the offence but stated they were under the influence of liquor and did not realize what they were doing. The magistrate after lecturing them, allowed them to go. In appearance the accused were most respectable young men.

NON-SUPPORT.

Alonzo Salsbury was charged with non-support of wife and family. As the parties agreed to live together and the husband promised to provide for his family the case was enlarged for a week. Mr. Anderson represented the crown; Mr. McMahon private prosecutor, and Mr. Carnew for the defendant.

A QUIET WEDDING.

MISS JENNIE PERRY, OF THIS CITY, BECOMES THE BRIDE OF A PITTSBURG GENTLEMAN.

A quiet wedding took place at 8 o'clock this morning at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Perry, Bridge street west, when their eldest daughter, Miss Jennie, was married to Mr. Wm. Pinches, of Pittsburg, Pa. The couple were unattended and the ceremony was witnessed by the family and a few intimate friends. Rev. C. H. Emerson, pastor of the Baptist church, officiated. At the conclusion of the ceremony a dainty spread was partaken of. The bride was the recipient of many useful and beautiful gifts. After a trip in the eastern part of the province, Mr. and Mrs. Pinches will proceed to their home in Pittsburg.

Special Meeting Of The City Council.

BUT CITY FATHERS COULD NOT, OWING TO LACK OF NUMBERS, TRANSACT BUSINESS FOR WHICH THEY WERE CALLED TOGETHER.

A special meeting of the City Council was called for last evening, for the purpose of passing some 32 granolithic walks by-laws. It was, however, impossible to pass the bylaws, owing to the fact that the required number of members did not put in an appearance. It was necessary to have at least eight Aldermen and the Mayor present, whereas there were but seven of the former. Those in attendance were Mayor Sulman, Ald. Ackerman, Burrows, Green, Marsh, Thompson, Vermilyea and Panter.

The Council, however, went into session for a few minutes and transacted some business.

A by-law was passed in regard to watering Victoria Avenue, Ald. Vermilyea being in the chair in committee of the whole.

MOTIONS.

After the following motions had passed without discussion, the Council adjourned:

Moved by Ald. Marsh, seconded by Ald. Panter, "That the prayer of the Belleville Canning Company, that they be allowed to construct a drain from their premises to Pinnacle street, be granted, providing that the company enter into an agreement to allow no solid matter to pass through this drain into the harbor, and that their drain or pit be subject to the approval of the Board of Health."—Carried.

Moved by Ald. Marsh, seconded by Ald. Panter, "That one-half of the amount payable to the Waterworks department for hydrant rental, namely, $3,550, be paid by the City Treasurer to this department at once."—Carried.

Mrs. Emerson Elliott Died In Hamilton

WAS DAUGHTER OF LATE DANIEL CUNNINGHAM, OF THIS CITY, AND MUCH ESTEEMED.

Word was received in the city this morning announcing the death of Mrs. Emerson Elliott, formerly Miss "Tessie" Cunningham, which sad event occurred at Hamilton during last night. Deceased who was upwards of 30 years of age, was a daughter of the late Mr. Daniel Cunningham and was born in this city, where she resided until a few years ago, when, with her husband, she went to the Ambitious City to reside. Mrs. Elliott was an estimable lady, beloved by all who knew her. She had been ill for some months with lung trouble. In addition to the husband, two little boys are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother. The remains will arrive here to-night for interment in the Belleville cemetery. The bereaved ones will receive the sympathy of a large circle of friends, this being the second affliction in the family within a few weeks.

ON CANADA ROUTE.

24-Knot Boats Will Run In Near Future.

London, April 30.—(C. A. P.)—The Canadian Associated Press yesterday had undoubted authority to state that the fast Atlantic service which has been so long in contemplation will in the very near future be an accomplished fact. There is to be a 24-knot service across the Atlantic and a fast service on the Pacific, cutting down the time to such an extent that the route will practically command business. It is regarded as the greatest Imperial project approached for many years, making, as it does, the route from the Mother Country and Canada to Eastern countries the world's thoroughfare. It is very well understood here that Lord Strathcona and Clifford Sifton have devoted a great deal of time and consideration to the matter, and will probably, if an agreement is reached with the Government's consent, undertake to make the necessary arrangements to carry the enterprise into effect. There will be then no more need of addressing letters to Canada via New York.

It is believed that the project will have the endorsement of the conference. It will no doubt involve a heavy subsidy from Canada, and no doubt Great Britain will participate equally.

YOUNG CHILD VICTIM.

Little Girl Assaulted and Murdered By Her Uncle.

Bennington, Vt., April 30.—News was brought here yesterday of an unusually atrocious crime in North Bennington Sunday night, the victim of the tragedy, a child less than 4 years old having been criminally assaulted and then murdered.

The victim of the crime was Ethel Mahan, the daughter of Jerman Mahan, a carpenter. The alleged assailant and murderer is Alfred Mahan, 23 years old, a brother of the child's father, who had volunteered to accompany the little girl from a pond where her father was fishing, to her home.

When the fishing party returned home there was no trace of the little Ethel. Search was made, and in a clump of bushes the body was found with the throat horribly cut and bearing other evidence of fiendish mistreatment.

Alfred Mahan, who is said by the authorities to have been the last person seen with her, was arrested.

GRAFT IN OLD LONDON.

Municipal Officials Appear In Criminal Court For Bribery.

London, April 30.—The first trial here in a long time of municipal officials for receiving bribes began yesterday, when six members of the West Ham (an eastern suburb of London) board of guardians and four workhouse and infirmary officials appeared in the dock of the criminal court, charged with accepting money for awarding contracts for coal and other supplies, and for appointing minor officials.

The sums involved are comparatively small. It is charged, for instance, that a doctor paid $500 for a hospital appointment.

Attorney-General Walton and three assistants are prosecuting the officials, who are defended by a large array of counsel.

WINNIPEG'S BOULEVARDS.

Big Street Improvemnets Made In Prairie City During Year.

Winnipeg is proud of its parks and boulevards, of which there are a great many. All the urban parks are now practically beyond the stage of primary improvements and expenditures on these in future will be chiefly for maintenance. In Assiniboine Park temporary shelters have been built for the animals, which include nine buffaloes, two moose, two jumping deer, one elk, three bears and three eagles.

The boulevards maintained during the past year have a total frontage of over 60 miles. The average rate of maintenance is less than five cents per front foot, which is fully 50 per cent. below the average rate of last year.

Cost of Construction.

This year boulevards were constructed on 24 streets, having an aggregate frontage of over twelve miles. The average cost of this work per front foot was slightly over 32 cents, which is considerably higher than last year. This is accounted for in the fact that the boulevards laid down this year are of a greater width than those put down last year. The average cost, per yard, was less than 15 cents, or nearly four cents less per yard than the average cost last year. Of the 12 miles laid down about two and a half were seeded, while the balance was sodded. Experience gained in the past shows that the seeding produces a boulevard superior in every way to the boulevard that is sodded, while there is very little difference in the cost. And while it might be ill-advised to seed some streets in preference to sodding them, yet each year sod is becoming more difficult to obtain and the quality inferior, so that it is only a natural consequence and a question of time when all boulevards, for the most part, will be seeded.

Miles of Trees.

The properties benefitted by tree planting extended over seven streets, with a total frontage of about three miles. The average cost of the work was less than one and three-fifths cents per foot frontage. Great care is exercised in the planting and handling of trees—the percentage of replacing was much lower than in any other previous year. Following the custom established some years ago flowers from the parks were sent from time to time to the hospitals and the various other charitable institutions throughout the city.

Unless an agreement can be reached by Germany and Great Britain regarding the latter's proposal to limit armaments, The Hague Peace Conference will probably be a complete fiasco.

The Russian Government is reported to be greatly discouraged at the result of Prof. de Martens' tour of the European courts, on behalf of the Czar, to urge the participation of the Powers in his scheme of disarmament.

It is stated on reliable authority that Germany objects to Great Britain's proposal for the limitation of armaments, and demands its withdrawal. Should Germany be successful in this, Great Britain will probably withdraw from the conference, and the United States may do likewise.

If Great Britain's proposal is maintained on the program of the conference, it is probable that Germany, and, perhaps, Austria, will withdraw.

The Czar is reported to be endeavoring to secure an agreement between Great Britain and Germany on this point, and he is in personal communication with the Kaiser.

Child Directs His Attention to Room in Flames—Mother and Children Unconscious on the Floor—Rescuer Falls Insensible on Sidewalk—Police Nearly Suffocated In Blaze at Tenement House.

New York, April 30.—Five women and children overcome by smoke were carried yesterday from a blazing tenement house at No. 12 McKinney street, Brooklyn, by policemen who were themselves almost suffocated in their act of heroism. And a little girl proved herself a real heroine.

Policeman Gallagher heard a boy crying out an alarm, but was unable to learn the cause until he had soothed the child. As he turned in an alarm, Gallagher directed the boy to run to the Fulton street police station, telling him to get the reserves to the scene as quickly as possible.

As Gallagher ran toward the house, a little girl was waving her hands frantically from a window on the second floor. Flames were bursting from the third floor. Policemen Green and Denny dashed upstairs, broke open the door, and saw Mrs. Mary Page, with a two-year-old girl baby in her arms, unconscious on the floor. A few feet away lay William, seven years old, and Teddy, five. The little child at the window was Hannah, nine years old. Denny picked up the mother and child and staggered to the street with them in his arms. Green turned to Hannah.

"Take the others. I'll follow you," the child said resolutely.

She clung to his coat tails as he went downstairs with the other children in his arms. They were all scorched pretty badly, for the flames had reached the second floor and quickly gutted it, as had been the case on the third floor. Denny fell unconscious when he reached the sidewalk.

Dr. Prentice, from the Brooklyn Hospital, resuscitated mother, children and policeman.

After the fire had been extinguished Gallagher went up to the rooms of Mrs. Page and recovered a purse containing $140. Then Mrs. Hannah Dolan sent him up for hers and he brought it back. It contained $800 in scorched bills.

Crockett, managing director and editor of The Fredericton Gleaner, was on Saturday served by Sheriff Sterling with a writ issued by the supreme court at the suit of Hon. H. R. Emmerson, for $25,000 damages, on account of the publication of an article charging the ex-Minister of Railways with immoral conduct. The advocates acting for Mr. Emmerson are Hon. Dr. Pugsley, Premier and Atorney-General, and J. H. Barry, K.C., of this city. It is also said that Mr. Emmerson will institute criminal proceedings against the same party.

COLLISION NEAR WHITBY.

One Man May Die, and Another Is Seriously Injured.

Whitby, April 30.—A freight train from the north on Sunday night ran into the rear car of a number, which had been switched too far on to the northern division main line. Brakeman Farrell of Lindsay had a leg broken in two places and his head badly injured, and it is reported he may die. He was removed to Lindsay. Engineer McCutcheon of Lindsay had a leg badly cut. The property damage was slight.

Cloudburst Causes Flood.

Oklahoma City, Okla., April 30.—A cloudburst over Capitol Hill, a suburb of this city, just south of the Canadian River, flooded that place. Seven persons are missing, and believed to be drowned. Many persons encamped on the lowlands near the river were caught unawares, and had but little time to make their escape. The river is bank-full, and it will be some time before it can be determined whether any lives really were lost. There was another heavy rainfall yesterday, which caused the river to rise higher, endangering property in the lowlands.

BIG BREWERY BURNED

Fire at Toronto Destroys $200,000 Worth of Property.

Cause of Blaze Is Unknown—Originated In Old Elevator—Spread With Great Rapidity Till Five Buildings Were Alight—Firemen Hampered by Dense Smoke — Danger From Gasoline Tanks—No Lives Lost.

Toronto, April 30.—Fire swept the buildings of the Davies Brewing Co., at Queen street and the Don Esplanade this morning. The loss may reach $200,000.

Those who suffer loss are:
The Davies Brewing Co., $80,000.
The Ontario Storage Co., $40,000.
The Dustless Method Cleaning Co., $5,000.
The Crown Bottling Works, $5,000.
John Dick, owner of a portion of the buildings, $30,000.

The blaze originated in the old elevator of the brewery, now occupied by the Ontario Storage Co. The cause is unknown.

At 12.30 a.m. P. C. Hawthorne saw flames coming from the roof of the building, a two-storey brick structure, and he pulled an alarm from box 217.

General Alarm.

Chief Thompson was one of the first to arrive and promptly sent in a call for reinforcements, the firemen from Bay, Queen, Yonge street and Rose avenue stations responding.

There was a dense smoke, and the fire was hard to get at.

At 1.30 John Dick, who owns the building, warned the firemen to beware of the east wall, which, he said, was in danger of collapsing.

A few minutes later the blaze got into the malthouse of the brewery, and in less than an hour the roof had fallen in.

It was feared that the storage department would ignite.

A corrugated iron building, occupied by the Dustless Method Cleaning Company, was badly damaged. Two tanks of gasoline were in the building, and made the task of the firemen very dangerous.

A building occupied by the Crown Bottling Works was scorched. Arthur H. Davies is proprietor.

The Davies Brewing Company includes Arthur H. and Franklin J. Davies. They estimate the loss to the malthouse at $60,000 on contents and $20,000 on building. The storage warehouse is valued at $60,000.

The building occupied by the Storage company is owned by John Dick, and was valued at $30,000, and fully insured.

John H. King is proprietor of the Storage Company.

Three horses were taken from a stable which was threatened.

The residence of A. H. Davies, on River street, was in the danger zone, and the contents were removed.

Firemen Hampered.

The structure of the buildings, with few doors and windows, greatly handicapped the firemen in getting at the blaze. The storage building was beyond saving when the firemen reached the spot, and the attack of the sheets of flame on the surrounding buildings could not be resisted.

The engines from Berkeley, Lombard and Bay streets were in commission, and a good water pressure was the result.

Conservatives Get Busy.

Montreal, April 30.—It is understood that R. L. Borden and leading followers in Parliament will hold a series of political gatherings throughout the country during the present season, and that before the House again meets both the Upper and Lower Provinces will have been visited by the Conservative leader and his chief lieutenants. It is also stated that particular attention will be given to the special sections of the Province of Quebec and five districts of Montreal. Three Rivers and Quebec as well as the Eastern Townships, will hear the Conservative chieftain, with Messrs. F. D. Monk, M. P., J. G. H. Bergeron, M. P.; T. Chase Casgrain, ex-M. P.; Hon. Thomas Chapais, Hon. L. P. Pelletier, L. T. Marechal, together with such English speakers as Messrs. Rufus M. Pope, ex-M. P.; H. B. Ames, M. P., and others.

$75,000 Ransom Paid.

Constantinople, April 30.—Seventy-five thousand dollars was the ransom paid for the release of Robert Abbot, the son of a prominent British subject residing at Salenika, who was kidnapped from his father's garden March 24, and eventually liberated when the demands of his abductors had been conceded. The brigands originally demanded $100,000. The British Government will insist that the ransom be repaid by the Turkish Government.

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

Watertown, N. Y., April 30.—One man was killed and several others injured yesterday afternoon by the explosion of the boiler of a locomotive on the Cranberry Lake Railroad at Wanakona. The dead man is Horace Tussel, a passenger. Among the injured is William Reynolds, another passenger of Watertown, and the engineer and fireman.

Murder and Suicide.

Philadelphia, April 30.—Because she said she would rather die than marry him, Martha Corian, aged 22 years, a German servant girl, was shot and killed almost instantly here yesterday by Franz Andrewskty. The murderer turned the revolver upon himself.

Family Has Narrow Escape.

Cornwall, April 30.—Fire destroyed the residence of John Kennedy, Tinkess crossing, a couple of miles west of Cornwall, on Sunday morning. The family had a narrow escape, the whole building being on fire when they awoke at 4 a. m.
